THE JURIST.

LONDON, JULY 4, 1857.

"The worst constituted of all judicatures," says Bentham, "except the House of Commons, is the House of Lords*." This, however, was written during the legal dictatorship of Lord Eldon, when what is happily now the exception was then the rule. The evil of a Lord Chancellor sitting upon appeals from his own decrees had not escaped that earnest-minded and eminently philosophical lawyer. Contrasting a mere rehearing with an appeal, he says, "With regard to a rehearing there is no fraud; all is what it seems to be. The fraud is where the appeal is from the Chancellor himself to a judicatory of which he is not only a member, but the only thinking one—a judicatory in which on ordinary occasions none attend, except as two ciphers, who vote as they see him vote, without pretence of thinking †."

The fact that the abuse complained of by Bentham only occasionally occurs now is no reason why it should not at once be abolished; for no person, even at the present day, knows how the House of Lords may be constituted, except numerically, "until the brass gates are opened;" it may for the time being perchance be strong, or perchance it may consist of a mere legal unit, in this instance conferring no value upon the attendant lay ciphers.

Since a former article upon this subject (ante, p. 233) another case has occurred forcibly illustrating the remarks we there made. The case we allude to is Ridgeway v. Wharton, which was heard before Sir J. Stuart, V. C., in July, 1853, who made a decree for specific performance in favour of the plaintiff, the two points at issue being, first, whether a person was the agent of the plaintiff; and, secondly, whether he, as agent, had entered into a valid agreement within the meaning of the Statute of Frauds. On the 11th January, 1854, the Lord Chancellor, sitting alone, reversed the decision of Sir J. Stuart, V. C., being of opinion, that although the case of agency had been made out, there was no valid agreement signed by the agent. (See 3 De G., Mac., & G. 677). The case came on first to be heard in the House of Lords in the year 1856, before two law lords only, viz. the Lord Chancellor (who had already in his own court reversed the decision of the Vice-Chancellor) and Lord Brougham, who directed the case to be re-argued. Accordingly, after the lapse of a year, the case was again heard, and judgment delivered by the House on the 26th June last. The Lord Chancellor changed his opinion, on one point holding that agency had not been established, and retained it as to the agreement not being within the statute. Lord St. Leonards, in a long and elaborate judgment, was in favour of the decision of the Vice-Chancellor upon both points. Lord Brougham and Lord Wensleydale concurred with the Lord Chancellor, and in consequence affirmed the decision of the Lord Chancellor. And "Lord Brougham, in concurring with the opinion of his noble and learned friend the Lord Chancellor, could not help expressing himself in terms of praise with respect to the fair, open, and manly manner in which that noble lord had stated his change of opinion, instead of keeping on in the wrong for the sake of preserving his so-called consistency. If the candid course adopted by his noble friend had always been followed, there would not have been so much bad law in the books as was unfortunately to be found there." (See the Times, 27th June, 1857). Now, look at this case: even if, when it came on first to be heard in the House of Lords, Lord Brougham had differed from the opinion of the Lord Chancellor, the decision of the latter in his own court would have remained unreversed, and his own opinion would have prevailed over those of two judges. The Lord Chancellor's change of opinion, with which the majority of the House concurred, did not affect the result, viz. the affirmance of his own judgment, and the reversal of the Vice-Chancellor's. It is true that in this case, even if the Lord Chancellor had not sat in the House of Lords upon the appeal from his own decree, there would still have been a majority in favour of it; nevertheless, the complimentary expressions of Lord Brougham towards the Lord Chancellor, "for the fair, open, and manly way in which that noble lord had stated his change of opinion," followed by the statement that much bad law is to be found in the books in consequence of others not having adopted the candid course adopted by his noble friend, ought not to be passed over without observation. This is precisely what we complain of, for as in former times, upon the authority of Lord Brougham, so, in all ordinary probability, in future times, should the law remain unaltered, we may have as occupants of the woolsack men whose candour and manliness may not equal that of the present Lord Chancellor, and the result will be, as in former times, much bad law, to the detriment of the public, and consequently much injustice, to the injury of individuals. That it requires no slight effort and no inconsiderable strength of mind for a judge of a court of appeal to acknowledge that he was in error in a court below in reversing the decision of another judge, Lord Brougham tacitly, by his compliment, (which would be otherwise displaced), admits; and if such a compliment be deserved (as doubtless it must be, otherwise it would not have been uttered by Lord Brougham) in a case where the change of opinion by the judge only added an additional argument in support of his own decree, how much more difficult the task, how much more deserving of commendation would be the judge who should by a change of opinion (we believe almost unprecedented) restore the decree which he had formerly reversed. No judge should be subjected to such a trial, before which, we have it on the high authority of Lord Brougham, some have already succumbed.

* Bentham, by Bowring, vol. 4, p. 353.
† Id. 153.

If further evidence or reasoning were necessary to shew the truth of our remarks, let any man put the question to himself, whether, if he had a right to challenge his judges, he would ever wish to be heard on appeal by a judge who had already decided against him. We will venture to assert that there is no man who would not exercise such right, unless, indeed, he was aware that, from some mental idiosyncrasy, any particular judge was as likely to change as to retain the opinion he had already expressed.

To proceed, however, to the Lords Committee on this subject. By its report of the 20th May, 1856, as might à priori have been expected, they agreed as to the expediency of retaining the appellate jurisdiction of the House of Lords; and after stating the principal objections raised as to the present constitution and practice of the House as a court of ultimate appeal, they came to the following conclusions:—First, that although instances had been adduced where appeals in the House had been decided, with advantage to the law and satisfaction to the public, by the Lord Chancellor or one law lord alone, yet that the House, as a general rule, should be able to reckon on the attendance of not less than three law lords to assist in the hearing of all appeals; but in making this recommendation the committee by no means wished to discourage the attendance of other members of the House.

With reference to this conclusion, we cannot but infer, that in recommending that three law lords at least should sit upon appeals, the committee must have been aware that instances might have been adduced in which the decision of a single Lord Chancellor or law lord was not deserving of the very glowing compliments paid to some unnamed and exceptional cases. With regard to the attendance of other members—that is to say, of the lay peers—there certainly is no objection to their being present in a merely private capacity at the hearing of appeals, if they consider them either amusing or instructive; but in the name of common sense let us not perpetuate the absurdity of mere mock judges.

The committee then propose, first, the creation of two deputy speakers of the House of Lords, being persons who have held some high judicial office for not less than five years, and who are to receive a salary of 6000*l.* a year.

2. They propose that the House should be enabled to authorise its sittings for the hearing of appeals to be held notwithstanding a prorogation.

3. They suggest no fixed or invariable rule as to there being a Scotch judge as a member of the appellate court.

4. They leave the questions as to the unnecessary expenses of appeals to be dealt with by the Lord Chancellor and the Lords who assist him in hearing appeals.

5. They think that the mode of delivering judgments is a matter of discretion, but they recommend that those who hear appeals should have leave to sit at the table, and deliver their judgments sitting.

That in order to avoid the difficulty of conferring hereditary peerages on persons having judicial offices connected with the House of Lords, persons appointed to life peerages should enjoy all the privileges of Peers of Parliament, but that not more than four should have seats in the House at one time.

A bill founded on this report was thrown out by the Commons, and in doing so they had the general feeling of the country with them; for it is evident, notwithstanding the remedies suggested by the committee of the House of Lords for some notorious defects, the measure had not received that consideration which one of so much importance deserved; and, in fact, it was one calculated rather to preserve what has been termed the "privileges" of the House, than to provide the best possible supreme court for the use of the public. A much more comprehensive scheme is that of the present Attorney-General, (Sir Richard Bethell*), who proposed that the House of Lords should exercise its appellate jurisdiction through the medium of a judicial committee composed of Peers; that the jurisdiction and functions of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council should be vested in the Judicial Committee of the Lords, so that there might be (in the House of Lords) one single uniform appellate tribunal for the whole empire; and as he proposed that the Court should sit during five days in every week, except the vacations observed in Chancery, and that it should be constituted by the Lord Chancellor and four other members, it is to be presumed that this plan does not contemplate the Lord Chancellor sitting in any other court, so that he would no longer have attached to his office the disagreeable privilege or duty of sitting on appeals from his own decrees.

The consolidation of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council with the House of Lords would, we believe, add to the dignity of the House, and give satisfaction to suitors from every part of the empire. It may be asked, why abolish the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council? It may be said, its decisions give general—nay, universal—satisfaction. This is undoubtedly true, inasmuch as that Court happens at present generally to reckon among its members judges of the highest eminence; but still it labours under many disadvantages; its sittings are irregular and precarious; nor is the public quite aware how the arrangement of what particular members are to hear any particular cause is managed, or who is or are the manager or managers* by whom the selection of members to hear each cause is made. This tribunal also is open to this objection, perhaps not now so grave as it might have been in past, or may become in future, times—the judges, who are not appointed during good behaviour, are entirely dependent on the pleasure of the Sovereign, by whom every one of them, without cause assigned, may at any time be struck from the list of Privy Councillors.

We may here mention, that one subject does not, in our opinion, seem to have been taken sufficiently into consideration, viz. if there be established an efficient and accessible tribunal of ultimate appeal, might not intermediate courts of appeal, both at Common Law and Chancery, be dispensed with? If this could be effected, a supreme court might be constituted with little expense, and we believe with great advantage to the country. The two Lords Justices of the Court of Appeal in Chancery, together with two of the best common-law judges, who might possibly then be spared from their courts, would, with the other law lords, form a constellation of lawyers whose decisions would give satisfaction to the country, and whose presence would throw a lustre upon the House.

Review.

Key to the Law Reports. [Edward Cox, 1857.]

This is a useful table of law and equity reports, giving in parallel columns the abbreviated form in which they are usually cited, the name of the reporter, the period (chronological and regnal) over which the reports extend, the court or judge whose decisions they contain, and the date of their publication. The arrangement which has been adopted is alphabetical, and the table is intended to be framed, and suspended in the chambers and offices of legal practitioners. One or two instances will illustrate the compiler's plan better than any description. We select the Exchequer and Jurist Reports; they stand thus:—

"Exch. Rep.:—Exchequer Reports, 1847—1857. Exchequer. 10 Vict.—20 Vict. 1849—1857.

"Jur.:—Jurist Reports, 1837—1854. All the courts. 7 Will. 4—17 & 18 Vict. 1837—1854.

"Jur., N. S.:—Jurist Reports, New Series, 1855—1857. All the courts. 18 & 19 Vict.—20 Vict. 1855—1857."

The abbreviations used in law books, and in the opinions of counsel, are sometimes difficult to interpret, but this difficulty will be obviated by the use of the "Key" before us.

IMPORTANT EXPERIMENTS FOR DETECTION OF STRYCHNINE.

The great importance of the chemical evidence in recent cases of poisoning, and the fact of an eminent chemist having maintained the theory that there exists a deadly poison within the reach of the "dangerous classes," which after a certain time cannot be detected, have naturally led medical men to take a deep interest in the subject, and to endeavour to uphold the value of their science in the administration of justice.

Two of these gentlemen, Mr. Rodgers, many years lecturer on chemistry at the St. George's School of Medicine, and Mr. Prout Girdwood, assistant surgeon in the Grenadier Guards, a gentleman bearing a name already familiar in medical jurisprudence, undertook a series of experiments to test the truth of Professor Taylor's theory, and the conclusiveness of his analysis. The conclusions to which these gentlemen have come are the following:—

1. That the opinion that strychnine can only be detected when the poison is in excess is untenable, and not supported by trustworthy analysis.

2. That the opinion that strychnine is decomposed in the process of the destruction of life is founded on the results of analysis made by imperfect processes, and hence is unsound and unphilosophical.

3. That strychnine can always be detected, when it has occasioned death, in the blood, organs, and tissues of the body, quite independently of the contents of the stomach.

4. That it is found unchanged in the urine.

5. That the delicacy of the reactions of strychnine, and its extraordinary stable qualities, render its detection more certain than any other poison.

It would be impossible to give in a short space a detail of the experiments by which Messrs. Rodgers and Girdwood arrived at these conclusions, but the following is a precis of a few of them, from the pen of a professional gentleman present when they were made:—

"A rabbit was poisoned by five successive doses of strychnine, each containing one-thirtieth of a grain. Death followed in about three hours after the first dose, and within half an hour of the administration of the last. The contents of the stomach yielded strychnine in abundance. Half a pound of the flesh did the same. It was discovered in the bones and in the urine. Only one-sixth of a grain had been given to the creature. In three hours' time it had passed into every part of the body, and had there become so fixed as to be recoverable.

"The blood and contents of the stomach of a dog, poisoned by two grains of strychnine, were, after putrefaction, subjected to analysis, both yielding strychnine.

"The muscles, viscera, and bones of a dog, poisoned with a grain of strychnine, were separately subjected to analysis thirteen months after interment; strychnine was discovered in every instance.

"The organs and contents of the stomach of a rabbit, poisoned by half a grain of strychnine, yielded that alkaloid in each analysis.

"The viscera and contents of the stomach of a rabbit, poisoned by half a grain of strychnine and five grains of tartar emetic, yielded antimony and strychnine also in each analysis. The body of this rabbit was allowed to decompose in contact with air for nine months. When dry, the bones separated, and all the other tissues almost pulverulent, subjected to the same mode of analysis, yielded strychnine with equal facility.

"The quantity of strychnine reproduced in some of the cases, you will say, must be very small. This is quite true. Nevertheless I can vouch for the delicacy, certainty, and clearness of the chemical tests. I have seen the same unquestionable results both with large and small quantities; and it must be remembered that these terms are only relative. The two-thousandth part of a grain, to ordinary observers, would be not only a small quantity, but an inappreciable quantity; and until Messrs. Rodgers and Girdwood adopted their present process of analysis it was beyond the reach even of the chemist, when mixed with animal matter. Now the case is altered. I have seen a drop of a solution containing less than the two-thousandth part of a grain evaporated on a small porcelain dish. The spot left has been freed from all remaining trace of animal matter by strong sulphuric acid. A line drawn across it with a crystal of bichromate of potash has shewn, at every point, and beyond dispute, the characteristic colour depending on the presence of strychnine. Conceive, if possible, how small a quantity of the poison must have been present in each portion of that coloured line. Still it was as clear and plain to the sense of sight as the difference between sixpence and half-a-sovereign. There was some uncertainty once, when search was made for strychnine in animal bodies, owing to the difficulty of disengaging the drug from their tissues. Now there is none, because that difficulty is removed. The test for the poison, when pure, was always regarded as indisputable."

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JULY 11, 1857.

SEVERAL important decisions have been recently pronounced upon the Statutes of Limitations, and it may not be unacceptable to our readers to be supplied with a summary of them, and a few comments upon their leading points. Foremost among them is the case of Roddam v. Morley, (3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 449; 26 L. J., Ch., 438). In that case a bond had been given in 1826 by the testator, who afterwards devised his estates to his son for life, remainder to the first and other sons in tail. The obligor died in 1827, and interest was paid on the bond by the tenant for life until 1847. He died in 1854, and the question was, whether his son, the tenant in tail, was precluded from setting up the Statute of Limitations against the bond by reason of such payment of interest by the tenant for life. Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., held that he was not*; but on appeal this decision was reversed by the Lord Chancellor, who was assisted on the occasion by Williams and Crowder, JJ. They agreed with the Vice-Chancellor that the bond debt was not "charged upon or payable out of land" within the meaning of the 40th section of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27. The main question, however, was, whether the payment of interest by the tenant for life was an acknowledgment made "by the party liable by virtue of the bond" within the meaning of the 5th section of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42. By the 3rd section of that statute, actions on a bond or other specialty must be brought within twenty years of the cause of action; but by sect. 5, an acknowledgment, either by writing signed by the party liable by virtue of the specialty or his agent, or by part payment on account of principal or interest, gives a further period of twenty years after such acknowledgment. The Court were of opinion that the devisee was capable of making the acknowledgment, as being "liable" by virtue of the bond.

The next question was as to the effect of such acknowledgment, or, in other words, whether it set the action free generally, or only as to the particular party who had made the acknowledgment. The Court gave the wider effect to the acknowledgment, and therefore held that the remainderman could not avail himself of a defence under the Statute of Limitations after the part payment by the tenant for life. In opposition to this view, the enactment, giving a period of twenty years after the return from beyond seas of the party making the acknowledgment, he having been abroad at the time of making it, was relied upon, and it was said to be unreasonable that one of the parties liable being abroad, and having made an acknowledgment there, the limitation of the action should be suspended, as against all the other parties liable, though resident in England, till twenty years after he had returned. The learned judges, however, adverted to the construction put upon the analogous provision in 4 Ann. c. 16, s. 19, rendering the suspension of limitation applicable whenever, by reason of the absence beyond seas of any of the intended defendants, the plaintiff cannot have his complete remedy against all those whom he is entitled to sue. (Fannin v. Anderson, 7 Q. B. 811; Towns v. Mead, 16 C. B. 123). We may remind our readers that this cause of suspension is now wholly abolished by the Mercantile-law Amendment Act, 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, s. 11, whereby no person shall be entitled to any time for the commencement of an action or suit against one or more joint debtors who shall not be beyond the seas at the time when the cause of action accrued, by reason only that some other one or more of such joint debtors were, at the time of the accrual of the cause of action, beyond the seas; and the person entitled to sue shall not be barred from suing the joint debtor who was beyond the seas when the cause of action accrued, after his return, by reason only that judgment has been already recovered against others of the joint debtors who were not beyond seas at such time*. By sect. 11 no further time is allowed for suing than the period fixed by the Statutes of Limitations, by reason only of the person entitled to sue, or one or more of such persons, having been beyond seas or in prison at the time of the accrual of the cause of action.

* See the case in the court below, (2 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 805). See also Morley v. Morley, (1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1097).

The next case on this subject to which we call attention is one turning upon the 14th section of this statute, (19 & 20 Vict. c. 97). By that section it is enacted, that where there shall be two or more co-contractors, whether bound jointly, or jointly and severally, or executors or administrators of any such contractors, no one or more of them shall lose the benefit of the Statutes of Limitations, (21 Jac. 1, c. 16, and 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42), by reason only of payment of principal and interest or other money by any other of such co-contractors, executors, or administrators. This section was held by Sir R. T. Kindersley, V. C., in Thompson v. Waithman, (2 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1080), to have a retrospective effect. There two partners had made a joint promissory note, and after the death of one the surviving partner (who was also executor of the deceased) paid interest on the note, which took the case out of the Statute of Limitations as against him, although otherwise the statute would have been a bar to any action or suit on the note. Upon a claim by the holder against the estate of the deceased partner, it was held that the payments must be taken to have been made by him in his capacity of partner, and although this statute had passed after the cause of action accrued, it barred the claim. It must be admitted, however, that the Vice-Chancellor put his judgment as to the retrospective effect of this enactment in the statute on very special grounds. "It is said," observed the learned judge, "that the language of this section is future, and this is true with respect to the operation of the act, but there is nothing future with reference to the payment of principal or interest by the co-contractor. . . . . Then it is said that it cannot be assumed that the Legislature would intend to do so unjust an act as to take away the benefits to which the parties were entitled by an ex post facto law. Now, unquestionably, before the act there have been decisions not in accordance with one another, and there was a great question as to which way they ought to be; and certainly some of the later decisions have established the proposition, that payment by a co-contractor would deprive the contractor of the benefit of the statute of James. But there were other decisions, and it does not appear to me that any such argument as to injustice can prevail." The judgment in this case, therefore, seems to rest upon the facts that the object of the section was to prevent a party from "losing a benefit" to which he had once been entitled, and that the law upon the subject was somewhat doubtful at the time of the passing of the statute. But even on these grounds we venture to suggest, with all respect for the learned judge whose decision we are reviewing, that a retro-active operation ought not to have been given to this section, as it tended to affect a vested right of action. The maxim "Nova constitutio futuris formam imponere debet, non preterritis," should, we submit, be applied in such cases; and very recently the Court of Exchequer have held that the 1st section of this very statute is not retrospective*.

SYNOPSIS OF CROWN CASES.

OUR last synopsis of the decisions upon Crown Cases Reserved was given 2 Jur., N. S, part 2, p. 291. We now proceed to place before our readers the cases which have been decided and reported in our pages subsequently.

Abortion.]—The prisoner was asked by a woman to get her something to procure miscarriage. She did so, and gave it to her, with directions as to the quantity she was to take. The woman, in the absence of the prisoner, took the dose, and a miscarriage ensued. This was held to be a causing to be taken within stat. 1 Vict. c. 85, s. 6. (Reg. v. Wilson, 2 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1146). A similar conclusion was come to in Reg. v. Farrow, (3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 67), upon a similar state of facts.

Acting under Pretence of Process.]—By the County Court Act, 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 57, it is enacted that every person "who shall act or profess to act under any false colour or pretence of the process of the said court shall be guilty of felony:"—Held, (Bramwell, B., dissentiente), that to constitute this offence it is not necessary that there should be any actual process in existence, or anything purporting to be such. (Reg. v. Evans, 3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 594).

Arson.]—Upon the trial of an indictment under the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 89, s. 10, for setting fire to a stack of grain, it appeared that the stack in question was of the flax plant, with the seed or grain in it. The jury found that the flax seed is a grain, and convicted the prisoner. The Court affirmed the conviction. (Reg. v. Spencer, 2 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1212).

Attempts to commit Crimes.]—The prisoner was indicted for breaking and entering a dwelling-house, and stealing certain specified goods. At the time of the breaking and entering, the goods named in the indictment were not in the house, but there were other goods there belonging to the prosecutor:—Held, that there was no attempt to commit the felony charged in the indictment within the meaning of the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 9. (Reg. v. M'Pherson, 3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 523).

* The latter part of this clause was inserted on account of the decision in King v. Hoare, (13 M. & W. 494), that a judgment (without satisfaction) recovered against one of two joint debtors is a bar to an action against the other.

* Williams v. Smith, (Trin. T., 1857). There goods had been bound by a writ of fi. fa. delivered to the sheriff before the passing of the act, and had been purchased without notice, but not in market overt, after the act had passed; the Court held that they were bound by the writ. See, upon the point of statutes not being retrospective, Moon v. Durden, (2 Exch. 22); Hitchcock v. Way, (6 Ad. & El. 943); Edwards v. Sheren, (11 M. & W. 595); Marsh v. Higgins, (19 L. J., C. P., 297); Vansittart v. Taylor, (4 El. & Bl. 910); Pinhorn v. Souster, (8 Exch. 143); and Foster v. Pritchard, (26 L. J., Ex., 215).

Bankruptcy.]—By the 16th section of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 119, the declaration of insolvency must be filed "in the court within the district whereof the trader filing the same shall have resided or carried on business for six calendar months next immediately preceding the time of the filing thereof." An indictment against a bankrupt for mutilating his books alleged, that before and at the time &c., to wit, on the 23rd November, 1855, B. S. was a trader, &c., and that he for more than six months next immediately preceding the time of filing the petition for adjudication, &c. did reside and carry on business, &c. within the jurisdiction, &c., and that whilst he so resided &c., to wit, on the 23rd November, 1855, he filed with the registrar, &c. a declaration that he was unable to meet his engagements, and that whilst he so resided &c., to wit, on the 23rd November, 1855, he did present his petition for adjudication:—Held, after verdict, that the averments in the indictment were sufficient to shew that the requirements of the above statute had been complied with. (Reg. v. Scott, 2 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1096).

Bigamy.]—Upon the trial of an indictment for bigamy, it appeared that the prisoner's husband had been absent from her for seven years next preceding the second marriage, and there was no evidence that she knew him to be living at the time of the second marriage. The jury found that they had no evidence of the prisoner's knowledge of her husband being alive, but that they were of opinion she had the means of acquiring that knowledge if she had chosen to make use of them. The Court held, that upon this finding of the jury a conviction could not be supported. (Reg. v. Briggs, 2 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1195).

Where the first alleged marriage has taken place in a dissenting chapel, it is sufficient, in order to establish the fact of the marriage, to prove, by a witness who was present, the actual solemnisation of the marriage, and the presence of the registrar of the district at the marriage. (Reg. v. Mainwaring, 2 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1236).

To prove that a chapel was a duly registered building under the 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, a certificate under the hand of the superintendent registrar, which certified the fact that the chapel had been registered on a day named, was produced. A witness stated that he had examined the certificate with the register-book, and that it was correctly extracted. Pollock, C. B., and Willes, J., held that the document was admissible as an examined copy or extract within the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 14. (Ib.)

Cheating at Cards.]—In an indictment framed under the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 17, it is not necessary to aver to whom the money won by playing at cards belonged. (Reg. v. Moss, 2 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1196).

Embezzlement.]—A conviction for embezzlement was supported upon the following state of facts:—It was the prisoner's duty, when he received monies on account of his masters, to enter the amounts to the credit of the customers in a day-book, to make extracts from this book, and then to enter the whole amount on the credit side of a bankers' deposit account, and to pay in the amount to the credit of his masters with their bankers; he afterwards was to post the amounts in a ledger, which contained the accounts of the different customers. The prisoner received an amount, and appropriated it to his own use. The only entry he had made of this amount was in the ledger, where he had placed it to the credit of the customer. (Reg. v. Lister, 2 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1124).

The prisoner was employed at a railway station belonging to four different companies. The servants at this station were appointed and paid, and might be dismissed, by a committee of directors of the several companies. It was the prisoner's duty to pay over money received for parcels arriving by the trains of the different companies to the chief clerk, who then paid over such monies to the cashier of the committee, who kept a separate account for each company, and paid the money over directly to the company to whom it belonged. The prisoner was charged in different counts of an indictment for embezzlement, as being the servant of the particular company whose money he had embezzled, of the four companies, of the committee, and of the station-master. The Court held that at all events he was properly charged as the servant of the four companies. (Reg. v. Bayley, 2 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1171).

Evidence.]—In Reg. v. Scott (2 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1096) we have an important decision, materially affecting the position of bankrupts, so far as regards the evidence that may be given against them upon criminal charges subsequent to their examination in bankruptcy. By the 117th section of the Bankrupt-law Consolidation Act, it is compulsory upon a bankrupt, when examined by the Court of Bankruptcy, to answer all questions touching "matters relating to his trade, dealings, or estate," &c., although his answers may criminate himself. In the above case, the majority of the Court (Lord Campbell, C. J., Alderson, B., Willes, J., and Bramwell, B.) held that such answers might afterwards be given in evidence against a bankrupt upon a criminal charge. Coleridge, J., differed from his brethren; and when the important principle involved in the case is considered, it is perhaps to be regretted that it was not re-argued before and decided by all the judges. We have before made some observations upon this case. (See 2 Jur., N. S., part 2, p. 333).

In order to render a declaration by a deceased person admissible in evidence, he must have been, at the time he made it, under apprehension of death; such apprehension, however, need not be of death within a particular time; it must be made under the impression that he is about to die after comparatively a short lapse of time, and under the clear conviction that he will not recover. (Reg. v. Reany, 3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 191).

The evidence of a man who has seen another sign a document, but who knows nothing of the name of that other, except from having seen him so sign the document, is admissible as evidence of the name of that other, although the document itself may not be admissible. (Reg. v. Toole, 3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 420).

A medical witness proved that he had seen J. E. on the morning of the trial, and that he could not speak or hear; he added—"If brought here, he would not be able to give evidence; yet he might be brought here without danger to life, though I, as his physician, would not permit him to roam abroad if I knew it." Another witness stated that he had seen J. E. the preceding day in the street, near the door of his shop. Upon these facts, the deposition of J. E. before the magistrate was held to be admissible in evidence, under the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 17. (Reg. v. Cockburn, 3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 447).

False Pretences.]—Where the pretence is known to the prosecutor to be false, but he still parts from his money under a desire to entrap the defendant, this is not an obtaining money by false pretences. (Reg. v. Mills, 3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 447).

We have next to direct the attention of our readers to two most important decisions. We refer to Reg. v. Sherwood (3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 547) and Reg. v. Bryan, (3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 620). In the first, the Court, consisting of eleven of the learned judges, unanimously held, that a false representation of the quantity of an article sold and delivered is a false pretence within the meaning of the statute. The facts were as follows:—The defendant agreed to deliver a load of coals at a certain price per cwt.; he accordingly delivered a load, to his knowledge weighing 14 cwt. He afterwards falsely and fraudulently represented that the quantity he had delivered weighed 18 cwt., and that he had seen them weighed, and thereby obtained the price of 18 cwt. A conviction upon these facts was upheld. In Reg. v. Bryan, ten of their Lordships (Willes, J., and Bramwell, B., being of a different opinion) held that a false representation of the quality of an article, made in the course of a bargain or contract, is not a false pretence within the statute. The defendant had falsely represented that certain plated spoons which he offered in pledge "were of the best quality; that they were equal to Elkington's A; that the foundation was of the best material; and that they had as much silver on them as Elkington's A." By these representations the prosecutors were induced to advance money on the spoons. But the majority of the Court held, that a conviction for obtaining money by false pretences could not be sustained.

Correspondence.

ON CERTIFYING TITLES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—At p. 54 of their Report, "the Commissioners appointed to consider the subject of registration of title with reference to the sale and transfer of land" have enumerated under six headings the advantages which are expected to result from the adoption of the plan recommended by the majority of them.

It probably has occurred to many of your readers who have troubled themselves with the perusal of this voluminous and (so far as practical results are concerned) useless blue book, that the supposed advantages of the scheme which it advocates may more briefly be stated to consist of—first, the partial attainment of the doubtful benefits of a general register of deeds; and, secondly, some diminution of the expenses attending the sale and mortgage of (but no other dealing with) land by means of the gradual abridgment (where no warranty is given) of the period during which a retrospective investigation of title is to be carried, and the immediate abolition (where a warranty is given) of the necessity for any retrospective investigation at all, coupled with, in either case, a decrease in the length of conveyances on sale or mortgage.

The writer of this has no wish to discuss the advantages or disadvantages of a general register of assurances. That branch of the subject is pretty well worn threadbare: suffice it to remind the reader that many competent persons entertain the opinion, that registration per se is an evil, not a good, as leading to unnecessary exposure and expense, and that those who seek for the establishment of a register, on the ground of insecurity of title under the existing state of things, have failed to make out their case.

It is to the other of the anticipated advantages of the plan which has been favourably reported upon, viz. the relief which it will afford in respect of the examination into and proof of title, that the writer addresses himself, with the sole object of raising the question whether this benefit cannot be gained without any register at all.

That it is practicable, and in certain cases politic, to empower a public functionary to examine, either personally, or with the aid of counsel and solicitors, into the title of land, and by the conjoint operation of his certificate and registration to confer a parliamentary title on the purchaser or mortgagee of such land, is admitted in the Report. Indeed, the notion of a warranted title is based upon the scheme of investing the registrar with powers of this kind; but whether or not it is essential to the efficacy of a plan of certifying titles, so as to confer on purchasers, mortgagees, or owners an absolute or a qualified right of ownership, that it should be accompanied by the establishment of a register, is a matter not touched upon by the recent Report, probably because it would have been ultra vires for commissioners appointed to consider the subject of "registration" to entertain the point.

Adopting the hypothesis of the major part of the commissioners, and assuming that there is no special benefit to be derived from a register of assurances merely, the idea naturally enough suggests itself, that, without asking Government to assume the office of insurers of titles in any case, a plan confined to the official examination of titles as shewn by un-registered title deeds, with an enactment that the certificates granted by the examiner or examiners should in all cases be primâ facie evidence and (after due publicity and the lapse of a certain interval) conclusive evidence of the certified rights of ownership, might readily enough be elaborated, and that such plan would possibly effect all that is good, and avoid much that is evil, in the scheme to which the assenting commissioners have subscribed.

To compel any person to submit his title to the ordeal of an official examination would no doubt be wrong. It should be optional with all either to do so or not; but it can hardly be questioned that a very great boon would be conferred on landowners were the means given to them of procuring authentic primâ facie evidence of the state of their titles at any given moment, so as to enable them to debar purchasers and mortgagees, by a reasonable stipulation, from entering upon the customary sixty years' investigation; and that this boon would be greatly enhanced were it possible for owners to acquire indefeasible titles against all the world by advertising their certificates, and by nonclaim thereon for some comparatively short period.

The suggestion which the writer makes is, that this boon may be more readily and more universally attained without, than it would be with, the accompaniment of a register of any kind, (except, of course, a record for safe custody of certificates actually granted), and that by its attainment the real ends of legislative interference with the present law, viz. certainty and security of title to land, and simplicity and inexpensiveness in its transfer, may be approximately arrived at without bringing upon landowners the evils of a compulsory exposure of title, and the various disadvantages attendant upon the registration of freehold and leasehold interests in and charges upon the same land separately, while the real or equitable ownership is or may be wholly unregistered; and without, moreover, encountering the difficulty, nay the impossibility*, (which is not alluded to in the Report), of insuring due accuracy in the registration of portions of an entire estate, such as building ground sold off in small lots subsequently to its being first placed on the register.

Whether or not there is any value in this suggestion is the question to raise which these observations have been written; and it remains only, therefore, for the writer to express a hope that you or some of your readers may feel inclined at a future time to consider more in detail the notion of "certifying titles without registration." H. T. F.

* The blue book appears, indeed, to have been useless to our correspondent. It shews in detail and by example the method of effecting with simplicity and absolute accuracy that which he, in the presumption of uninquiring ignorance, pronounces to be impossible.—ED.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE.—The royal commissioners appointed to inquire and examine into the constitution of the superior courts of law at Westminster, and into the existing arrangements of the circuit courts, have agreed to their report, which will be printed and ready to be submitted to Parliament before the close of the session. It is understood that the commissioners will express their opinion, founded upon the evidence before them and their own experience, that no diminution of the number of judges can take place. Indeed, at this very time, the several courts can scarcely make up a full court, or get through the Nisi Prius sittings in time for the circuits. Several changes in the times and manner of holding the assizes will be recommended, as well as the division of the larger counties, and a more equal distribution of the circuits, with other matters of detail of a practical nature, so as to insure a more speedy and uniform administration of justice, both civil and criminal.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JULY 18, 1857.

THE most important rules of evidence are those which are directed to the exclusion of testimony which is irrelevant, unauthentic, or calculated to create unfair prejudice. Life and liberty daily depend upon the due observance of these rules: they are of greater practical consequence, though their operation is less noticed, than the boasted palladium of our liberties, the writ of habeas corpus; and without their observance, trial by jury would become "a mockery, a delusion, and a snare." It is just because their operation is not observed, except by those engaged in the actual administration of the law, (particularly the criminal law), that their importance is not always adequately appreciated; and it is on that account extremely desirable to embrace any opportunity which may arise to exhibit their practical operation, or, still more, to illustrate the peril which results from their being set at naught. We are sorry to say that in this latter point of view the case of Madeleine Smith affords an apt and painful illustration.

The Scotch law of evidence differs materially from our own. First, the prisoner is liable to be examined before trial; and, secondly, hearsay evidence is in general admissible when the declarant is dead. The doctrine which prevails on this branch of the subject is thus stated in Tait's Treatise on the Law of Evidence in Scotland, (p. 430, 2nd ed.):—"To this rule, excluding evidence upon the relation of others, there is an exception in the case where those others have died since the relation to the witness. Such evidence is admitted in England only in special cases. . . . But in this country evidence of what a person since dead, or who perhaps has become insane, has said deliberately and seriously, and not in a careless or jocular manner, (if such person would have been a competent witness), is admitted in all cases, as it is the best evidence which can be obtained in the circumstances, since the original narrator cannot now be examined. . . . But though hearsay evidence is admitted in such cases, it is far inferior in weight to the deposition of a witness regularly taken in process, and will only receive such regard as may seem, in the whole circumstances of the case, to be due to it as an ingredient in the evidence." The admissibility, however, of such evidence seems to have been questioned even by learned judges on the Scotch bench in recent times. Thus, in Bell's Supplement to Hume's Commentaries on Criminal Law, (p. 292), we read, that, on a trial for murder in 1835, it was proposed to read in evidence the deposition of the deceased made on the day after his injury. This was objected to, on the ground that the deponent stated that he hoped he should recover. Lord Moncrieff expressed a doubt as to the competency of the evidence, stating that it was the invariable practice in England to require that the person should believe he was dying; but the Lord Justice Clerk and Lords Mackenzie and Medwyn held, that by the law of Scotland the declaration was admissible.

Now, in the case of Madeleine Smith the sole question was, whether she actually administered the poison of which it was plain the deceased had died. The indictment, in conformity with the principles of evidence we have stated, charged, in order to admit evidence of them, two attempts to poison the deceased—that is to say, two administrations of arsenic: first, on the 19th February; and, secondly, on the 22nd February; and then it charged, thirdly, an administration of arsenic on the 22nd or 23rd March, and, as the consequence of one or all of these poisonings, charged that she murdered the deceased.

What was the evidence as to her administration of the poison?

First, the fact that the deceased died of arsenic, and had exhibited arsenical symptoms on the 19th and 22nd February.

Next, her own confession that she had given the deceased cocoa on one occasion, and that she had purchased arsenic; to which it may be added, that the purchases proved were after the 19th February.

Thirdly, a body of letters, raising a moral probability that she might desire his death, because shewing, first, a criminal intercourse with him; secondly, a proposal of marriage from a third party accepted; thirdly, his possession of letters which, if disclosed, would ruin her; and, fourthly, his refusal to restore them.

Fourthly, a verbal declaration by the deceased to Miss Perry that he had been ill after taking cocoa from her, and suspected her; and, nevertheless, that he was going to see her again in a day or two.

Fifthly, that on one or two occasions the deceased had been in the house, (but always on appointment, and with the privity of a servant).

Sixthly, that she sent him an appointment for a secret meeting at her father's house on the Saturday, and that he, having missed that appointment, was in the neighbourhood on the night of Sunday, which was the fatal occasion.

Now, observe, the third head of evidence—the letters—went, (with the exception of the last, as to the appointment, and the possibility of an interview)—went entirely to motive.

The evidence as to the actual administration was, then, entirely composed (with the exception of the declaration) of the facts, that she had arsenic, (after the first symptoms of arsenical poisoning); that he died of arsenic; that she had once given him something to drink, in which poison might have been; that after that he had suffered arsenical symptoms; that she had sent for him; and that he was in the neighbourhood of her house on the fatal night.

Now, it is manifest, that apart from the declaration of the deceased, there was not any evidence against her. The whole case for the prosecution, then, so far as regarded the fact of administration, (which was really the only point in the case), rested on the declaration. We need hardly say, that mere motive, (or rather evidence of facts which might to her afford a motive), however material it may be to shew the intention of an act which in itself is clearly proved, is hardly competent to prove the act itself.

Well, then, all rested upon the declaration of the deceased to Miss Perry; and to shew the importance of the question as to its admissibility, let us observe, that one of the letters (No. 65) shewed that Miss Perry had had a quarrel with the prisoner; that there was no evidence that the prisoner had poison before the 19th; and that it appeared that the deceased was in the habit of taking meals with Miss Perry, and had dined with her on the 17th, two days before the date laid for the first poisoning.

The evidence of Miss Perry, who was a confidante of the deceased, and well aware of his intimacy with the accused, was this—"He dined with me on the 17th February, and said he should see the accused by appointment on the 19th. The deceased took tea with me on the 9th March; he said that he had seen her; he said he could not think why it was he was so ill after taking cocoa from her. I understood he alluded to two occasions, and I understood him to allude to the accused, for he had been speaking of her. I said, 'Why should you think so?' He said, 'Perhaps she would not be sorry to be rid of me.' He seemed to have suspicions of her, although not serious." By which surely the witness merely meant that he had not a settled conviction; for certainly the expression of suspicion, as she gave it, was serious enough with a vengeance. This was the only material piece of evidence as to the fact of the administration of arsenic by the accused, and of course it was of the very essence of the case. Let us look at it closely. Cross-examined, the witness admitted that she had been refreshed in her recollection of the date by the official who took her precognition of a fact, on which the Lord Justice Clerk severely animadverted; and it appeared that she had been examined six times for the prosecution, (although her examination was by no means lengthy), and after the judicial examination of the accused, who had confessed that she had once given the deceased cocoa, and that she had purchased arsenic. It was not asked whether the witness had been "refreshed" as to this in one of her six examinations, but it is very likely she was, as she had been on the important point of date, though not enough to get rid of this important fact—that the deceased had arsenical symptoms on the 19th February, before the accused had poison. We observe on this, in passing, to illustrate the peril of the Scotch (and French) systems of judicial examinations of accused parties: it is plain that the theory of the prosecution was framed on the two admissions so frankly made by the accused, that she had given the deceased cocoa, and that she had possession of arsenic; and then the evidence was "got up" to support that theory; and six different times is the only material witness "examined" in order to bring her evidence to square with it; and it transpires that the evidence is actually, on the matter of date, made to agree with it, at the suggestion of the official, who of course was aware (even if the witness was not) of the admissions of the accused.

Our chief object, however, is to illustrate the danger of admitting these declarations of the deceased. One great argument against their admissibility is the impossibility of testing the evidence, and the fatal facility it affords for manufacturing evidence against an accused party.

It is liable to the worst evil of hearsay, for the witness knows that the evidence cannot be contradicted. It is moreover open to this objection, that supposing the indictment had only been for intent to murder, and the party had not died, and had been called himself, he could not have proved a declaration to a third party, except as accompanying an "act done;" neither could he have stated his suspicion, but must have stated facts, and left the jury to draw their own inference. The admission of such evidence is the more remarkable, because the judges rejected some memoranda made by the deceased, (after the 11th February), although, as these were in his own handwriting, there could at least be no doubt that he made them, and they amounted not merely to clear proof of his own declaration, but his written and deliberate declaration. Indeed, they were rejected on that very ground, that they were deliberate, and might have been made for a purpose. But does not that equally apply to oral declarations, and more especially as to suspicion?—whereas the memoranda were, it appears, only as to facts.

The question on this part of the case is of so much legal interest that we insert at length the best report we have been able to procure of the judgment of the Court, which was delivered after taking time to consider, and after consultation with the other Lords of Justiciary:—

"The Lord Justice Clerk said that hearsay evidence was admissible under restrictions and conditions, which went in many instances to the entire rejection of it. What was proposed to be admitted were certain jottings in a memorandum-book, in which certain things were stated which affected vitally the charge. It was a very sacred duty not to relax the rules of evidence merely because it was material to the charge. It must be evidence legally competent to be tendered against the prisoner. Although material, if not legally admissible, it could not be received. It was important to consider in what circumstances, from what motive, and at what time these entries were made. Now, it was a remarkable fact, that before the date sought to be commenced with in this diary, as evidence offered by the Lord Advocate, the deceased had a purpose in writing these—purposely to strengthen his hold over the prisoner. He made that observation not merely with reference to the weight and credibility of these entries, but with regard to their admissibility. As it was a departure from all former procedure of the Court, he thought that the evidence tendered must be rejected.

"Lord Handyside said, that, according to his understanding, these entries were from the 11th February to the 14th March, and had reference only to the first and second charges of the indictment. The whole entries were made in pencil, and it was possible that the original entries might have been rubbed out, and others substituted at any period after the person making them had perhaps changed his mind or corrected his memory. He was impressed strongly with the danger of admitting a journal of this kind. He had come to the opinion, therefore, that the entries, which, as he understood, were offered in support of the first and second charges, should be rejected.

"Lord Ivory said he felt himself greatly relieved from responsibility after the opinions of their Lordships. He had come to the conclusion, after most anxious and repeated consideration, that these entries ought not to be excluded. He thought that this document valeat quantum was admissible as evidence, and that its weight and value was for the jury to consider. He would content himself with expressing his dissent from the judgments of their Lordships."

We do not think that even if the declaration had been admitted, it made a case against the accused; nor do we admit, that, assuming it to have been proved that the deceased had been with her on the fatal night, the evidence even then would have been adequate; for how could the suspicions of the deceased that the accused had poisoned him, even coupled with the fact that he had suffered under arsenical symptoms on one occasion before she had poison, be evidence that she had afterwards administered poison to him, especially as the assumption that he had again taken a poisoned draught from her, under the circumstances, would not only tend to neutralise the effect of, but be inconsistent with, his previous suspicions? The fact of the deceased having been with her on the fatal night would not at the utmost do more than shew that she might have administered poison to him—as any one might with whom he was that night, during the four or five hours unaccounted for; and several links were wanting to constitute a chain of circumstantial evidence on which it would be safe to convict; as, for instance, that he was in the house; that she made cocoa on that night, or had it made, and ready. Even adding those facts, the assumption of an administration of cocoa to the deceased, charged with arsenic, would be an inference not devoid of danger. To complete the case, it should have been shewn that he was with her from such a period on the night, and up to such a period; that it was a natural and probable inference that the arsenical symptoms at two in the morning should have arisen from arsenic administered within that time. That would not have been conclusive, for he might have put it himself into the cocoa, with or without her observing it; and the period within which arsenic begins to operate varies greatly; but still it would have been a reasonable amount of circumstantial proof, and would have doubtless warranted a conviction. But how infinitely short of this was the evidence, even including the declaration! There was no proof that the deceased had been with the accused that night; and though it was proved that two, if not three, hours before the time when they could well have met (for the house would hardly have been safe and quiet until midnight, the family going to bed about eleven, and the deceased was not seen in the neighbourhood after nine) he was in the vicinity of her house, that was accounted for by the fact that he called on some one; as to whom, or the nature of the business the deceased might have had with him, the prosecutor gave no evidence. There was, indeed, no evidence that the deceased had even seen the accused for six weeks before the death, and her own solemn declaration immediately afterwards that she had not seen him within that period was not contradicted. This must have been the first occasion on which the Crown sought to convict an accused party of the murder of a person by poison without any evidence that the accused had seen him within six weeks of his death! Nor was this all: it was the first instance surely in which, though suspicion arose, and the accused was examined, and apprehended almost immediately, no proof was offered that the accused had, in fact, on the occasion in question, anything ready for administration; there was no proof of any preparation of cocoa on the day or night in question, though the evidence and traces of it must certainly have been ascertainable in such a prompt investigation as took place; especially as the evidence for the prosecution shewed that the arsenic must have been boiled with the cocoa in order to hold such a quantity as 200 or 160 grains (the estimated quantity) in solution. And, further, while on the one hand it was proved that the deceased had arsenical symptoms before the accused had poison, so on the other hand there was no proof that the arsenic which she had (and which it was shewn could be traceable by its colouring matter) was the arsenic which was found in his stomach. As to any found in the tissues, there is this important observation, which ought never to be lost sight of in cases of poisoning by arsenic, that when once absorbed into the blood*, it never departs from the body; from which it follows, that arsenic found in the tissues especially may have been administered a month before the death, or even a much longer time. The case for the prosecution was, that the three poisonings had all been by the same party, (the only probable theory, for it is not supposable that at the same time two persons not acting in concert should be engaged in poisoning the same party), and accordingly the accused was charged with all three. But the Court directed an acquittal on the first charge, on which the jury found a verdict of not guilty, as they could hardly have failed to do, since the accused was not proved to have had poison until after the first symptoms of arsenical poisoning. Yet if not guilty of the first poisoning, how was it possible to find her guilty of the second or third? The only material piece of evidence in the case was the declaration of the deceased proved by Miss Perry, which took place before the final poisoning, and referred to two prior poisonings; and if that, as the Court most justly considered, was no evidence as to the prior poisonings, how could it have been evidence as to the subsequent poisoning?

It was conceded by the Court that there was no evidence against the prisoner of a poisoning prior to the 21st; and the case for the prosecution as to the subsequent poisonings mainly rested on the fact of her possession of arsenic, the symptoms of arsenic, and the declaration by the deceased of suspicion as to two poisonings prior to the 9th March. With regard to the symptoms of arsenic, as they were proved to have existed before the prisoner purchased poison—and she is entirely acquitted as to the first poisoning on that very ground—the inference raised is wholly in her favour, for the probability is, and it was the theory of the prosecution, that if the earlier symptoms did not arise from poison administered by her, the later symptoms and the fatal result did not arise from poison administered by her. The great fact on which the prosecutor relied was her purchase of poison; and on that head the strength of the case for the prosecution lay in these facts—that she gave false excuses for the purchases at the time they were made; that she gave a different excuse (viz. the use of the arsenic for cosmetic purposes) when she was examined; that this excuse could not apply to the prussic acid which she had sought to obtain; that the purchases proved were, first, after his refusal to return the letters, (the 18th February); secondly, after his imperative demand for explanation as to the marriage with Minnoch, (the 5th March); and that after those purchases he had arsenical symptoms. There was, be it observed, evidence of an appointment for the 19th February, but no evidence of any interview after that, nor of any actual administration of anything to the deceased at any time subsequent to the possession of poison.

Now, if the possession of poison was accounted for, the whole strength of the case on this head would be destroyed; and the most natural, and to our minds, on reading the letters, the most obvious supposition is, that she had purchased the poison for herself. Her letters just before she sought to procure prussic acid, and did for the first time obtain arsenic, viz. the 21st February, clearly pointed at suicide; and the cosmetic theory which her counsel adopted would not explain the attempted purchase of the prussic acid. Considering the state of frenzy in which the girl was on the 21st February, and the probability that she was in a similar state (after the letter of the 5th March) when she purchased the second quantity of arsenic on the 6th March, what could be more probable than that she should provide herself with the means of suicide, in case either pregnancy or the exposure of her character should take place. The fact of the purchase of poison is, at all events, as consistent with the supposition of suicide as of murder. That the quantities purchased were tenfold greater than necessary for the destruction of life militates no more against the one supposition than the other; and that she should have made two separate purchases no more supports the one than the other; and moreover the second purchase is explainable on one of two obvious grounds, viz. first, that between the time of the first purchase (the 21st February) and the second (the 6th March) she had, as indeed the letter of the deceased on the 5th March plainly intimates, reason to believe that the difficulty had blown over, and therefore had thrown the poison away, or used it as a cosmetic; and next, that on the 6th she was going to the country house, and might desire to have a packet of arsenic at both residences, to be ready in case the dreaded exposure should come upon her at either. Bearing in mind her uncertainty as to the time at which it might come upon her, this surely is a reasonable supposition; more so than that she should have purchased arsenic to poison her lover, whom she was not to see during her absence from Glasgow, for a period of ten days. To this is to be added that both purchases were open. The fact that she gave a false reason on those occasions is immaterial, since no one avows an intention of suicide; and the feigned purpose would require a purchase of a quantity considerably larger than necessary to destroy human life. That she should have stated, when examined, not that she purchased the arsenic as a cosmetic, but that she used it as such, is not much more material, especially as, first, she stated also the excuse which she gave at the druggist's; secondly, there was evidence that she might have so used it, and that she knew it might be so used; thirdly, it was probable that she might have used it after the danger apprehended on each occasion had apparently passed away; and, fourthly, it is plain that during the time which intervened between the first purchase and the second, and between the second and the death, she had on each occasion reason to hope that the danger had passed away. No one can question that a person would gladly discard the idea of suicide as soon as possible, and get rid of the possession of poison as soon as it appeared no longer necessary for the purpose. Neither can it be doubted, that, on the other hand, a person would wait as long as possible to see if there was any urgent necessity for suicide, or if it could not be avoided. It would have been worse than suicidal to have poisoned the deceased, he retaining the letters, until, at all events, it was beyond all doubt that he could not be won over. That this hope had not been exhausted up to the fatal night is plain from the prisoner's letters of appointment; and the theory of the prosecution, that the deceased ardently responded to the one which reached him last, tends obviously to the same conclusion. Then the hope could not have been exhausted until the fatal night. If then exhausted at an interview between the parties, could it have happened without altercation or exasperation on both sides? And on that supposition is it likely that he would have received poison from her, with his previous suspicions, which must then have revived, that she "wished to get rid of him?" The suggestion of the prosecution was, that the letter of the 5th March immediately exhausted all hope in the prisoner's mind, and determined her to murder, and that the later letters were deceptive. No doubt it might have been so, for that is a suggestion which it would be impossible to disprove. But the question is, whether there was evidence that it was so. On a trial for murder it is not enough merely to suggest a theory, and say that the accused might have intended to do it, and infer, from her providing the means of murder or suicide, that she committed murder, without any proof that she ever had even an opportunity of committing it. It is enough for the accused that the possession of the poison is accounted for on a theory consistent with the facts, and consistent also with innocence. The possession of the arsenic is accounted for by the theory of contemplated suicide, whether the cosmetic theory were true or false. But there was no evidence that it was false; and if true, then it dispenses with the theory of suicide, except as to the attempted purchase of prussic acid; and it is most important that the use of cocoa is proved to have been begun so far back as November, 1856, some months before Minnoch proposed, and long before (even on the theory of the prosecution) any motive for desiring the death of the deceased had arisen. Thus, then, there was at the utmost only a case of suspicion, and that a case explainable on a theory consistent with the facts, and consistent with entire innocence. That being so, was there a case for the jury? The judges themselves thought not as to the first charge. The theory of the prosecution was, that if the prisoner was guilty on the third, she was on the first. She was not guilty of the third, if not guilty of the first.

* As it very rapidly is, insomuch that in this very case it was said by the medical witnesses, that it is not what is found in the stomach, but what has been carried off by absorption, which kills the recipient, and on this occasion only five grains were found intact in the stomach.

Yet the accused had a most narrow escape from conviction on the third—the capital charge. Only by a majority of the jury was the charge found not proven. So that the accused was nearly convicted of murder, without any evidence that she had seen the deceased for six weeks previous to his death. The counsel quoted the case of Eliza Fenning; but there, at all events, it was proved that the girl had an opportunity of administering the poison to the deceased, for she resided in his house, and was in his service. The probabilities of conviction in the case which we are reviewing were doubtless increased by the able but somewhat unscrupulous speech of the Lord Advocate, and by the manner in which the Lord Justice Clerk pressed against the prisoner the licentiousness of some of her letters, laying down to the jury that they were to consider, not merely whether the nature of the letters would make her anxious to procure them, but whether they did not shew that the accused was a person capable of conceiving any way of avoiding exposure, (that is, murder), "and harbouring any feeling of revenge when driven to madness." The licentiousness of the letters surely could not shew that the writer was capable of committing murder to recover them; and the desire to recover them would be quite a different feeling from the desire of revenge, and indeed, in some points of view, inconsistent with it; for revenge might be regardless of exposure, (which was certain to result from murder), and the desire to avoid exposure would argue a far more prudent state of mind. And then as to the madness, it was the frenzied agony of apprehension, couched in terms of tender and impassioned entreaty, and of a sad desperation, pointing much more to suicide than murder. Above all, the narrow escape of the accused from conviction was owing to the departure from English rules of evidence, to which it has been our main object to draw attention.

Some discussion has taken place in our journals upon the difference, if any, between the verdict of "not guilty" and "not proven," especially with reference to the important point whether on "not proven" the accused can be subjected to a second trial. Baron Hume (Com. Cr. Law, b. 2, c. 16, p. 440) gives the history of the practice of returning verdicts of "not proven," whence it clearly appears that originally it was merely the jury's way of saying not guilty, "as it was thought more suitable for them to employ the terms 'proven' and 'not proven,' as clearly referable to their own peculiar department, than those of 'guilty' and 'not guilty,' which might cover a complex and more enlarged view of the case, and thus encroach on the functions of the Court. In later times our juries," he says, "have freely made use of the one or the other of those phrases, as they have judged more suitable to the case in hand. Not uncommonly the phrase 'not proven' has been employed to mark a deficiency only of lawful evidence to convict the panel, and that of 'not guilty' to convey the jury's opinion of his innocence." And Alison & Bell say that "not proven" imports, that in the opinion of the jury there is a deficiency of evidence to convict.

But this leaves the question open whether the verdict of "not proven" is a bar to any future prosecution for the same offence. It undoubtedly appears to follow, from the view of Baron Hume, that it is so, as also from the general principle of Scotch law, that no one can be tried again who has "tholed an assize," which means, been in jeopardy of life. But one has to collect this inferentially; and it is not stated, as one would expect it to be, clearly and explicitly. Baron Hume speaks in several places of a verdict of "not proven" as a verdict of "not guilty," (p. 459); as surely it is, in substance; for what have the jury to do with anything but legal proof? So he speaks of only two sentences —of absolution or condemnation; and in the present case the Court pronounced the former judgment, (as, of course, there could be no other, unless the verdict was "guilty"), and ordered the panel to be "assoilzied."

LORD CAMPBELL's bill for preventing the sale of obscene books and pictures is printed in another part of our columns. It has been already amended in some material respects, but must, we think, be further amended before it can safely be inrolled among our statutes. As at present framed, its provisions confer very dangerous powers on justices of the peace and police constables. By the 1st section, which involves the objectionable part of the bill, any justice, upon complaint on oath that the complainant has reason to and does believe that any obscene books, &c. are kept in any house, &c. for the purpose of sale or distribution, exhibition, lending upon hire, or being otherwise published &c., upon statement on oath of such facts as shall satisfy the justice that the complainant's belief is well founded, and that such "or other" (?) matters are of such a character and description that the publication of them would be a misdemeanour, and proper to be prosecuted as such, may give authority, by special warrant, to any constable or police officer to enter into such house*, and, if necessary, to use force, by breaking open doors, and to search for and seize all such books, &c. as aforesaid found in such house, and to burn or otherwise to destroy the same. No form of warrant is given by the act; but we apprehend that under this section a police constable may be authorised by warrant to enter a house, and generally "to search for and seize any obscene books, papers, writings, prints, pictures, drawings, or other obscene representations kept therein for the purpose of sale or distribution, exhibition, lending upon hire, or being otherwise published*, and to burn or otherwise destroy the same." If the section is not intended to authorise so general a warrant, its language should be altered, and certainly a form of warrant should be given in the act. If, however, a warrant in such general terms comes within the scope and intent of the framers of this bill, and the articles to be seized are not to be more accurately defined, it will vest in a police constable a very wide discretion as to his right of capture; but what is still more objectionable, he will at the same time be empowered to destroy the things which he has seized, and thus, on his own mere opinion, to inflict irremediable injury, and to deprive the owner of all evidence of illegality or excess. Say that a valuable book, not coming within the meaning of the warrant, has been seized and burnt; the only remedy would be against the police constable, which practically is no remedy at all; and the book being destroyed, he might with comparative safety deny that he had ever taken it. Now, these objections may be obviated by requiring the policeman to take what he has seized to the magistrate, who shall then summon the owner to shew cause why they should not be condemned and destroyed. This would give the owner an opportunity of averting the destruction of his property, and of knowing what had been taken, and at all events would render its destruction the act of the magistrate, from whom some redress might be obtained in the event of illegal or oppressive conduct.

(From a Correspondent).

THE present state of the law relating to the discharge of a surety by the giving of time by the creditor to the principal, when the fact of suretyship does not appear upon the face of the written contract, seems to be unsatisfactory and unsettled. The recent case of Pooley v. Harradine (3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 488) was an action by the payee against one of the makers of a promissory note. The defendant pleaded, by way of equitable defence, that the note was made by him as surety only of one of the other makers; that the note was accepted by the plaintiff on the express agreement between him and the defendant, that the defendant should be liable only as surety; and that the plaintiff afterwards gave time to the principal. Coleridge, J., who delivered the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench, held that this plea stated a good answer to the action; but he at the same time expressed a hope, in which every lawyer must join, that the whole subject would be reviewed in a court of error. The great point in dispute is, whether any, and if any, then to what extent, parol evidence is admissible to prove a suretyship which is not disclosed by the written contract declared upon; and in the cases which have arisen on the point, much confusion has resulted from an attempt to distinguish between the degrees of favour shewn to a surety by a Court of law and a Court of equity respectively. The principles which seem to govern the question are few and clear, namely—first, that parol evidence cannot be admitted to vary the written contract, (this rule, it will be remembered, holds both at law and in equity); secondly, that upon any admitted state of facts, the rights and liabilities of a surety, so far as regards his discharge by acts of the creditor, are the same both at law and in equity; and, thirdly, that although parol evidence is inadmissible, either at law or in equity, to vary the written contract, yet equity will admit it for the purpose of rectifying the contract, i. e. of proving that the written contract is not the contract which the parties intended to put into writing. The first of the above principles is in every case admitted, and yet, strangely enough, many of the cases are inconsistent with it. It is expressly insisted upon in Pooley v. Harradine, where Coleridge, J., puts the case upon the only sustainable ground, when he says, that, under the circumstances now being considered, the surety must be discharged (if he be discharged at all) by virtue of an equity not arising out of the contract, but independent of the contract; or, in other words, by reason simply of its being unfair that the creditor should be allowed to enforce his rights under the contract against the surety, when, knowing (no matter from what source) the position of the surety, he has, by giving time to the principal, wilfully deprived the surety of his remedy over against that principal. It follows necessarily, if the above doctrine be sound, that it is immaterial to the question at what time, whether at the time of the contract being entered into or subsequently, the knowledge of the suretyship is acquired by the creditor; the unfairness of the creditor's act must be judged of with regard to his knowledge when he committed that act. Some persons may have difficulty in understanding how the rights under a contract can be affected by any acts done which are not contrary to the good faith of that contract; still, the doctrine has undoubtedly much to be said in its favour, and it seems to be the only sustainable ground upon which parol evidence can be brought to the relief of the surety, except in the few cases in which the third principle above enunciated is applicable. The Court of Queen's Bench are now, (as appears from the judgment in Pooley v. Harradine), and so also, it seems, are the Lords Justices, (vide Stainbank v. Davies, as cited and commented on in Pooley v. Harradine), prepared to carry the above doctrine to its full extent; but in so doing they must disregard Manley v. Boycot, (2 El. & Bl. 46), (which was not cited in Pooley v. Harradine); Strong v. Foster, (17 C. B. 201); and (it is submitted, notwithstanding the remarks of Coleridge, J., to the contrary) Hollier v. Eyre, (9 Cl. & Fin. 1); in the first two of which cases it is distinctly laid down, and in the last of which it seems to be implied, that in order to discharge the surety, it must be shewn that the fact of suretyship was known to the creditor at the time the written contract was entered into; and moreover, that the creditor agreed to accept the surety as surety, and not as principal. This seems very like admitting evidence to vary the written contract, and surely cannot be sustained. It is true, that in Pooley v. Harradine it was declared to be immaterial, with reference to the plea there adjudicated on, to decide whether it is essential that the relationship of principal and surety should be known to the creditor at the time of the entering into the written contract; but it is submitted that that cannot be essential, except for the purpose of importing into the contract something more than is expressed in the writing.

---

* The phraseology adopted, notwithstanding the improved language of modern statutes and pleadings, is after the old latin form—" into such house, &c. to enter."

* We presume the warrant need not contain the other words of the section, "and of such a character and description that the publication thereof would be a misdemeanour, and proper to be prosecuted as such."

There is, however, a very serious practical objection to the doctrine propounded in Pooley v. Harradine. It frequently happens, as suggested in that case, that a contract such as that declared upon is entered into, and that the fact of one of the parties being a surety is known to all the parties, and yet that none of them have any intention that the creditor should be in any way affected by that knowledge; and in such cases it is hard to allow the surety afterwards to assert, as a defence to an action on the contract, an equity (falsely so called) which at the time of the making of the contract was never intended to be set up. If a party to a contract wishes to rely on his privileges as a surety, it is very easy for him to express as much on the face of the contract; and on the whole the interests of justice would, it is apprehended, be best served by the laying down of the distinct rule, (in equity as well as at law), that unless a party chooses to stipulate in the written contract for the privileges of a surety, those privileges will not, in an action on that contract, be accorded to him. Such a rule would in no way affect the power exercised by a Court of equity to rectify the contract.

SYNOPSIS OF CROWN CASES.

(Concluded from p. 280).

Foreigners—High Seas.]—Where one foreigner inflicts an injury upon another foreigner on board a foreign vessel on the high seas, and the latter afterwards dies of the injury in this country, no offence cognisable by the laws of this country has been committed. (Reg. v. Lewis, 3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 523).

Forgery.]—Upon certain proceedings before justices against a pawnbroker, he delivered to the justices, through the hands of his attorney, a forged duplicate of goods that had been pledged with him. This was held to be an uttering by the pawnbroker. It was also held that the duplicate was "an accountable receipt" within stat. 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 66, s. 10. (Reg. v. Fitchie, 3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 419).

Larceny.]—In Reg. v. Wilson (3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 167) the prisoner was convicted of stealing certain articles of dress. He had sold them openly at a public-house shortly after they were stolen. When apprehended he stated that C. and D. had brought the goods to his house, and that W. would say so, and that being on the spree he had sold them and spent the money. C. and D. were apprehended, and C. convicted of stealing other goods at the same time and from the same place. Neither C., D., nor W. was called at the trial to negative the prisoner's statement. The Court affirmed the conviction, upon the ground that there was some evidence upon which the jury might convict. Pollock, C. B., however, said, "I should be sorry that upon such evidence any prisoner should be convicted before me."

Upon the trial of an indictment for larceny as a servant, there was abundant evidence of embezzlement, but none of larceny. It was held, that although, under the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 13, the prisoner might have been convicted of the embezzlement, yet a conviction against him for the larceny was wrong. (Reg. v. Gorbutt, 3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 371).

The prisoner agreed with the wife of the prosecutor that they should go away and live in adultery; they accordingly left the prosecutor's house, but were overtaken on the road in company together, the prisoner carrying a bandbox containing articles of the wife's wearing apparel. The Court quashed a conviction for larceny of the husband's goods. (Reg. v. Fitch, 3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 524).

T. J., the owner of a watch, had placed it with the seller for a specific purpose. By the fraud of the prisoner he was induced to believe that T. J. had desired him to send it by post to the postmaster at B., inclosed in a letter addressed to T. J. The postmaster, also induced by the fraud of the prisoner, delivered the watch to him, believing him to be T. J. or his agent, and he then appropriated it to his own use:—Held, that this was larceny of the watch from the owner. (Reg. v. Kay, 3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 546).

Nuisance.]—To deposit and keep in a warehouse, situate in a populous district, large and excessive quantities of "wood naphtha," is a nuisance at common law, although the greatest care may be used in the warehouse to prevent ignition. (Reg. v. Lister, 3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 570).

Perjury.]—A question as to what is sufficient to constitute a residence within the meaning of the Bastardy Act, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, so as to give justices jurisdiction to grant an affiliation summons, arose in the case of Reg. v. Hughes, (3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 448). The facts were as follows:—The mother of a bastard child, who had been residing with her parents in one petty sessional division, went into another division (D.) for the purpose of affiliating her child, D. being nearer than the place where the magistrates for the other division resided. She lodged at D. three weeks, and after obtaining the order went into service in the division in which her parents resided, but did not return to them. She had stated that she could not go back to her parents, but that she meant to leave D. directly the order was made; and she did, in fact, leave the next day. The Court held that she was residing within the division to which she had applied; the magistrates, therefore, had jurisdiction, and a conviction for perjury upon the affiliation summons was right.

Practice.]—Bank notes are properly described in an indictment for larceny as "money," although at the time they were stolen they were not in circulation, but were in the hands of the bankers themselves. (Reg. v. West, 2 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1123).

In Reg. v. Green (2 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1146) the prisoner was indicted for larceny of the goods of R. B.; it appearing, however, in evidence that J. B., and not R. B., was the owner of the goods, the indictment was not amended, but an acquittal was directed. She was then charged upon another indictment, in which the goods were laid as the property of J. B.:—Held, that a plea of autrefois acquit to this second indictment could not be sustained.

Removal of Corpse.]—It is a misdemeanour at common law to remove a corpse which has been buried in ground belonging to a congregation of Protestant Dissenters, although the act may have been done from motives of filial affection and religious duty. (Reg. v. Sharpe, 3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 192).

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JULY 25, 1857.

One of the most important bills now before Parliament is doubtless that of the Attorney-General, for making "better provision for the punishment of frauds committed by trustees, bankers, and other persons intrusted with property."

So far as the proposed bill extends to one class, viz. to bankers, merchants, brokers, attornies, and agents, and especially so far as it relates to such persons as directors or managers of any body corporate or public company, we fully agree with it, as supplying a great and universally acknowledged defect in our laws.

With reference, however, to such part of the bill as deals with another class of persons, we mean trustees, executors, and administrators, we think that the Legislature should at any rate pause before placing them in the same category with the persons comprised in the former class, consisting in general of men who have been specially educated for the business they undertake to perform, and, what is more, who are paid for performing it.

With regard to ordinary trustees, their position is far different: in the great mass of cases they have received no special education to fit them for their duties, often very arduous, and extending over a long series of years, and which frequently they have with great reluctance undertaken.

Another very important consideration is this—that except where there is a particular contract or provision made for that purpose, their duties are purely honorary; and for whatever time and labour they have expended, to their own private loss, in the performance of the trusts, they can claim no remuneration, but simply their costs out of pocket.

In legislating upon so important and delicate a subject, we should take into consideration not merely particular instances where beneficiaries have been defrauded or even ruined by their trustees, (and these cases we believe to be less numerous than they are supposed to be), but we should also consider how often, under our laws—which, to say the least, operate very harshly against persons undertaking the onerous and thankless office of trustees—such persons, without any delinquency on their parts, but merely from being unacquainted with the duties of their office, and with the decisions of the Courts of equity embodied in many hundreds of volumes of reports, are involved in costly litigation, are obliged to pay sums which they have never spent or appropriated to their own purposes, and are by no means rarely utterly ruined.

These risks, to which trustees are liable, make it often a matter of difficulty to get prudent and responsible persons to accept an office which may be visited with such results. Is not the present bill likely to increase those difficulties—at any rate, unless it is accompanied by a measure which will give some compensation to trustees, who, although meaning well, and intending honestly, so far as they are able, to perform their duties, nevertheless fall within some of the numerous pitfalls contrived by the ingenuity of Courts of equity?

Let us briefly examine the bill of the Attorney-General. In the first place, the punishment to which a trustee under the proposed bill may be liable, upon being found guilty of a misdemeanour within its meaning, is, "at the discretion of the Court, to be kept in penal servitude for the term of three years, or to suffer such other punishment, by imprisonment for not more than two years, with or without hard labour, or by fine, as the Court shall award."

It is true, that in order to exclude from the operation of the proposed bill breaches of trust of an ordinary character, it is confined to cases where the trustee "shall, with intent to defraud, convert or appropriate" trust property, "or any part thereof, to or for his own use or purposes, or shall, with intent aforesaid, otherwise dispose of or destroy such property, or any part thereof." (Sect. 1). And again: no proceeding or prosecution for any offence included in the 1st section is to be commenced without the sanction of one of the judges of the superior courts of law or equity, or of the Attorney-General, or, if that office be vacant, of the Solicitor-General, such sanction to be obtained upon application by affidavit, or on oath, upon its appearing that there is a reasonable and probable cause for proceedings; but in every case the party accused is to have an opportunity of answering the charge, where it can be done with due regard to the interests of justice. And it is provided, that where any civil proceeding has been taken against a person under the 1st section, the sanction of the court or judge must be obtained before any prosecution is commenced. (Sect. 12).

Although these various safeguards are provided against proceedings of a malicious character being taken against trustees, still we can conceive many cases in which trustees (and how many of them are not only not men of business, but illiterate and ignorant?) may bring themselves, without any intention of doing wrong, within the operation of the act; and even if the requisite sanction may not be obtained to criminal proceedings being taken against them, they will be subjected to the indignity and scandal which will more or less be attendant upon even an unsuccessful application for the sanction. The Attorney-General's bill has, however, been read a third time by the House of Commons; it has yet to be subjected, we trust, to a more careful examination by the House of Lords.

The defect of the bill has been clearly seen by Lord St. Leonards, whose great experience (perhaps greater than most men now living) in Chancery proceedings has shewn him that such a measure as the Attorney-General's ought, if it should be applied to the further punishment of private trustees, to be accompanied by another for their relief. Lord St. Leonards' bill "has for its object the better protection of trustees, executors, and administrators acting bonâ fide in discharge of their office." It proposes to enact that trustees (in which term we include trustees, executors, or administrators) acting bonâ fide may set off the profit against the loss occasioned by any breach of trust; but as between or amongst the parties beneficially interested the profit and loss are to be distributed as the justice of the case may require. (Sect. 1). Where a trustee has bonâ fide made overpayments of income to a person entitled for life or any less estate, a remainderman, who, being sui juris, knew and did not object to such payments, shall only proceed against the person to whom the overpayment has been made; and in every case of overpayment of income to a person entitled to an estate for life or for any less estate, such person, where the right of the person in remainder has been enforced against the trustee, must indemnify him therefor. (Sect. 2). A trustee is not to be liable for making any payment, or acting under a power of attorney, in ignorance of the death of the party who gave it. (Sect. 3).

With reference to these provisions, they seem to us to be just and proper: for instance, with reference to the 1st section, although it is right that a trustee should derive no profit from his trust, yet in some cases it may be right that he should set off profits against losses. Suppose, for instance, a trustee, holding a sum of 2000*l.*, in breach of trust advanced a portion of it upon a security not authorised by the trust, by which, instead of making about 3*l.* per cent. if invested upon proper security, he made 7*l.* per cent., and in consequence of his not investing the other sum no interest whatever was made by it, if the whole of the two sums belonged to the same person or class of persons, the profits made by the investment of the one sum might very fairly be set off against the loss occasioned by the non-investment of the other sum. If, however, the two funds belonged to different parties, then, it is presumed, the proviso giving a discretion to the Court would be usefully applicable.

The 2nd section appears to carry out rather more fully a principle which is already acted upon pretty extensively by Courts of equity.

The 3rd section adopts the principle of the Code Napoleon, according to which, "Si le mandataire ignore la mort du mandant . . . . Ce qu'il a fait dans cette ignorance est valide."

The 4th section of the bill has for its object the protection of trustees from liabilities in consequence of investments, and it provides, that where a trustee shall, in investing a fund, have bonâ fide acted upon the written opinion of one of her Majesty's counsel actually practising at the Chancery bar, communicated to the parties interested if adult, and to other persons there mentioned, in the case of the parties interested not being adult or sui juris, such trustee is not to be liable as for a breach of trust in respect of such investment. We think, with reference to this section, that if for the words "one of her Majesty's counsel," &c. were substituted the words "one of the conveyancing counsel of the Court of Chancery," this clause, though it has not been favourably commented upon, would be most useful. Again: if a testator shall not have directed an act to be done which in equity ought to be done, a trustee, in the absence of crassa negligentia, and if he has not been required to perform the same, shall not be chargeable for having omitted to do such act, but he is still to be liable for the interest of balances retained in his hands. (Sect. 5).

Then a trustee is not to be liable for omitting to sue for a debt where there was reasonable ground for believing that an action or suit would not have led to the recovery thereof, or of some substantial part thereof. (Sect. 6). Then follows a somewhat similar, though perhaps rather complicated clause, as to bond debts due to a testator or intestate. (Sect. 7).

The next section limits the liability of executors and administrators in respect of rents, covenants, or agreements contained in any lease or agreement for a lease granted or assigned to the testator or intestate. (Sect. 8).

An executor or administrator, after giving such notice as would be given by the Court of Chancery in an administration suit, is not to be liable for distributing the assets, (sect. 9); and any trustee, executor, or administrator may apply to a judge of the Court of Chancery for his opinion, advice, or direction in the management of the trust property.

This is but a very brief summary of Lord St. Leonards' bill. It is, perhaps, too late to expect that this session it will become the law of the land, but we hope that the House of Lords will, in passing the bill of the Attorney-General, strike out those clauses which apply to private trustees. They may well form the subject of a bill for next session, when the whole subject relating to them may be fully and fairly considered. Thus amended, we believe the Attorney-General's bill will pass by acclamation.

AT law the assignee of a term, whether assigns be named in the lease or not, is bound, so long as he continues in possession, to pay the rent and perform such of the covenants comprised in the lease as run with the land. On covenants simply collateral or personal, however, he is never liable, even though assigns be named therein; while there is a small intermediate class of covenants which do not concern things appurtenant to the land and in being at the time of the demise, and which are not therefore real, but are at the same time not merely personal to the lessee, inasmuch as they relate to something to be done upon the land, and of which the assignee would have the benefit, and by these he is obliged only when the lessee has covenanted for his assigns as well as for himself. The liability of the assignee of leasehold property at law is founded upon the privity of estate between the lessor and the assignee of the lessee, which is created by the execution of the deed of assignment; and therefore it is not necessary, in order to raise it, that the assignee should be in the actual possession of the premises, but only that he should have the legal estate, the word "possession" being at law nothing more than a synonym for the possessory right; and directly the assignee parts with the legal estate, the liability ceases, except for breaches of covenant committed during the time of his enjoyment. It has also been established, in spite of some fluctuations of judicial opinion, that a mortgagee who has obtained an assignment of the demised premises, instead of an underlease, is in the same position as an assignee of the ordinary kind, and may therefore be sued upon the covenants in the lease for breaches committed during the continuance of his possession, although the premises may have been all the while occupied by the mortgagor. If, however, he can by any means get quit of his legal interest, he will thereby exonerate himself from all future claims; and to this end, if he cannot induce the lessor to accept a surrender, he will be justified, and not restrained by a Court of equity, in assigning over the lease to a person of no substance, or actually insolvent. (Onslow v. Corrie, 2 Mad. 330; Rowley v. Adams, 4 My. & C. 534).

With respect to the liability of an equitable assignee of a lease for years to the covenants in the lease, the decisions have been less harmonious and consistent. The earlier cases have for the most part been overruled or explained away; but it may be worth while shortly to trace the variations of the doctrine upon the subject, in order to shew more clearly what has now been finally settled. In Lucas v. Comerford, (3 Bro. C. C. 166; 1 Ves. 235; 8 Sim. 499), a suit having been instituted by a lessor for the purpose of compelling the mortgagee of the lease by deposit, who had possessed himself of the premises, and received the rents and profits, specifically to perform a covenant to rebuild, and for further relief, it was decreed by Lord Thurlow that the defendant should take a legal assignment at his own cost; and his Lordship told him, that if he had had a legal assignment he must have been bound by the covenant, and that having an equitable assignment he must be considered in exactly the same light as if he had had a legal assignment. But a difference appears to have been at this time admitted between the cases of a mortgagee in and out of possession; for only two years afterwards, in Sparkes v. Smith, (2 Vern. 275), where a lessee for years under covenants to repair had assigned the premises to one A., who never entered, the Court dismissed a bill filed by the lessor against the assignee to discover whether the premises were not assigned to him, and to force him to perform the covenants in specie, saying, that although it was the defendant's folly to take an assignment of the whole term, instead of a derivative lease, yet inasmuch as he was only a mortgagee, who never was in possession, they would not assist the plaintiff to charge him, but would leave the plaintiff to recover at law as well as he could. This difference, however, did not very long prevail. It was completely overthrown in Flight v. Bentley, (7 Sim. 149), in which case it was held that equitable assignees of a lease deposited to secure a debt due to them from the lessee were responsible to the lessor on the covenant for payment of rent, although they had never taken possession of the premises comprised in the lease. A similar judgment upon the question whether possession was or was not material followed soon afterwards in Jenkins v. Portman, (1 Kee. 435), although there the equitable assignee was not mortgagee, but had purchased the whole interest of the lessee, and caused it to be assigned to a trustee for himself. The rules laid down in these last two cases are said to have excited great alarm and dissatisfaction—not diminished, we should imagine, by the subsequent decision in Close v. Wilberforce, (1 Beav. 112), which declared that an equitable assignee under an agreement to purchase a leasehold estate, but with an express stipulation that he should not be entitled to a legal assignment, was bound to indemnify the lessee against all damages incurred by reason of breaches of covenant contained in the lease, and subsequent to the date of the agreement. Here, too, although the assignee had been in possession, that fact was not alluded to by the Master of the Rolls, nor did it in any way affect the conclusions to which he arrived. But about this period the mind of the Court underwent an unexpected revolution. In the very next case, of Moores v. Choat, (8 Sim. 508), in which the circumstances were precisely identical with those in Flight v. Bentley, it was held that the deposit of a lease by way of equitable mortgage did not render the depositary liable to the lessor upon the covenants to pay rent and repair, or upon any other covenants. Sir L. Shadwell, V. C., is further reported to have said, (p. 523), "I understand the law to be, that if a lessee contracts to sell his lease, and another party contracts to purchase it of him, it would be contrary to the established principles of a Court, either of law or equity, to say that thereupon any right arose to the landlord either to compel a purchaser to take an assignment of the lease, or to compel the purchaser to assign it." But as in this case the mortgagee and his executor, against whom the bill was filed, had merely retained the lease, without entering into possession of the premises, the old theory, that the exemption from the burthen was founded upon the non-enjoyment of the benefit, was for a while presumed to have been revived. Accordingly, in the two following cases of Wilson v. Leonard (3 Beav. 373) and Sanders v. Benson (4 Beav. 350) it was decided that the equitable assignee of a lease, or of an underlease, where the underlessee had covenanted to perform the covenants in the original lease, was under an obligation to indemnify his assignor for damages incurred by reason of breaches during the period of his occupation, or pernancy of the rents and profits; which was in effect to determine, and upon that principle the judgment proceeded, that the equitable assignee in possession was liable to the landlord upon the covenants contained in the lease. But in the case of Moore v. Greg, (2 Ph. 717), where the lessor's bill prayed that it might be declared generally that certain of the defendants, equitable mortgagees by deposit, who had taken possession of the premises, and had actually paid rent to the plaintiff, were bound to pay the rent and perform the covenants, and that the defendants, mortgagor and mortgagees, might be decreed respectively to execute and accept a legal assignment of the premises for the residue of the term, Lord Cottenham considered that there were no grounds for the interposition of the Court. From his Lordship's judgment it appeared plainly enough, that in his opinion not only was a Court of equity not justified in interfering, at the suit of the lessor, to compel a party, whose only connexion with the property was that he had taken a piece of parchment from the lessee as security for a debt, to put himself in a totally different situation from that which he intended, namely, to clothe himself with a legal liability to the covenants by taking an assignment of the lease; but also that where a man has contracted for an assignment of a lease, and is called upon in equity to fulfil the covenants, as he would be bound to do at law if the assignment had been actually executed, even that obligation, if it were one, would at the least be very difficult for the Court to enforce. Moreover, his Lordship clearly laid it down that the possession of the depositary could not operate to his prejudice. If it could, he added, there would be an end of the distinction between an assignment of a lease and an underlease, the recognition of which distinction shewed that the effect of possession depended upon the title under which it was taken, and that mere possession not taken under a title could go for nothing. His Lordship also pointed out that the real question in all these cases was, whether the owner of an estate can or cannot treat a party, who has only an equitable title to the lease derived from the lessee, in the same way as if he had a legal title; and he held, while maintaining the doctrine in Moores v. Choat, that that case had established that no privity exists between parties in those respective situations. This exposition of the law has since been confirmed and extended in two very recent and important cases, namely, Walters v. The Northern Coal Mining Company (5 De G., Mac., & G. 629; 2 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1) and Cox v. Bishop, (3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 499), which, together with Moores v. Choat and Moore v. Greg, may now be said to govern the subject. The details of the first of these cases are very complicated; but from the judgment of the Lord Chancellor we may eliminate the following propositions:—First, the rights of a landlord, against those who occupy his land, are legal rights. Therefore, where land is demised to one person as a trustee for another, the lessor cannot treat the cestui que trust as an equitable debtor for the amount of the rent, notwithstanding that the cestui que trust has assumed all the attributes of lessee; and the case of Clavering v. Westley, (3 P. Wms. 402), so far as it contradicts this maxim, must not be regarded as an authority. "If," argued his Lordship, "the cestui que trust should, as he certainly might, call on the lessee to assign the legal interest to him, the landlord would have a legal remedy by action against him as assignee. Surely it could not then be contended that the landlord could sue in equity as well as at law; and yet, if before the assignment he had an equitable right against the occupier, how could the occupier destroy that equitable right by an act to which the landlord was no party?" Secondly, if there was a previous contract between the cestui que trust and the landlord, that the latter should grant, and the former or his trustees accept, the lease, the landlord would be entitled to a specific performance of that contract; but if in a case of this sort there could be no decree for a specific performance of an agreement for a lease, there could not be any relief at all in a court of equity. In the case of Cox v. Bishop the defendants had agreed to purchase and take assignments of the interests of the lessees in certain coal-mines and closes of land, and had entered into possession, and acted as assignees; and the point raised was, whether they had become liable to be sued by the lessor for rent which had accrued due, and for damages for breaches of covenant which had been committed, during their enjoyment. The Lords Justices adopted the principles enunciated by the Lord Chancellor, that neither an equitable assignment alone, nor possession and enjoyment alone, nor both together, could give the landlord a title to relief in equity, and that the liability by reason of occupation, if any, ought to be asserted at law; and they decided, that without special circumstances, such as an impediment to proceeding at law, for the removal of which the assistance of the Court was required, they had no jurisdiction to interfere. Sir G. J. Turner, L. J., further stated, that the same argument was applicable to every kind of assignment, whether by way of mortgage, or otherwise howsoever; and that the difference in the case of a mortgage and of an equitable assignment by other means than a mortgage was not a difference in the relation between the lessor and the assignee, but in the relation between the assignee and the assignor. Finally, his Lordship observed, in corroboration of the Lord Chancellor's remark with reference to an agreement for a lease, that the usual practice in equity was not to decree the payment of the rent and performance of the covenants, but to decree execution of the lease, and to leave the parties to maintain their respective rights under the instrument in a court of common law.

An able article in the Westminster Review upon our courts of justice is well worthy of perusal by that wide class to which it appeals, viz. those who have suffered from the inconvenient arrangements and want of proper accommodation while attending English courts of justice, and those who are daily liable to undergo the ordeal. In other words, the whole of the public are interested in the question, and we hope that remedies for such glaring evils will soon be provided. The writer, after doing justice to the claims of judges, counsel, and attornies, thus describes the sufferings of jurors and witnesses:—

"However evil the condition of the courts may be to the three classes—judges, counsel, and attornies—they encounter only that which is deleterious and disagreeable, to a great extent, in the pursuit of profit, and it is impossible to excite much general commiseration for their wants, except on the ground of preserving these important functionaries in full efficiency. But we now come to the classes with whom the public sympathise most, because they are the public themselves—namely, the jurymen and witnesses. Perhaps, as far as mere respect is concerned, the juryman has the advantage of the witness. At least during part of his service the juryman sits in a box, (generally uncushioned), with more opportunities of breathing than is accorded to any one else in court except the judge. A juryman in waiting is, however, treated in the same rude and semi-barbarous way as are witnesses in waiting. Both classes know nothing except that they are waiting; for what purpose, time, or place, they have no instruction. There is no one to direct them to their proper court, or to seats reserved for them, if there were any, or to any place. They are left to wander at large about the court and its purlieus until they are wanted, when of course they are never to be found. Then arises from the officials of the court a fierce cry for 'jurymen in waitin',' accompanied with diapason growls from the judge about 'fines, and keeping the court.' Then the ushers of the court issue in hot haste from it, in what we may well term 'a juryman hunt.' One rushes into the great hall, gazes at its vast emptiness, and proclaims, in a monstrous voice, to the workmen employed there, that 'Jurymen air wanted in the Kim' Pleas.' This is an usher of the old school, attached to precedent, but averse to practical results. Having performed his duty according to ancient custom, he again retires to his little seat, and slumbers as of yore. The other, a younger man, with revolutionary notions of law reform, darts into a Nisi Prius court, where the great Serjeant is making a touching appeal in favour of his client. The usher, not regarding the sentiment of the moment, trumpets forth, in a tone that employs the whole ascending scale from 'do' to 'si,' that 'Jurymen air wanted in the Kimmin Pleas.' Every one's attention is distracted. The Serjeant's grand parenthesis in aggravation of damages is utterly ruined, and the jury soon afterwards give the victim of a 'breach of promise' a verdict of 40*s*. The hunt has been unsuccessful, and the business of the Common Pleas is stopped; but at this crisis it is discovered that the persons required have been all the time sitting in the barristers' seats, totally unaware that they were the persons in whose behalf all this commotion has taken place. They are, of course, immediately ordered into the jury-box, lectured by the judge, and then sworn in, with a savage earnestness that must strike terror into their hearts.

"Jurymen are not the only unfortunate persons summoned to our courts of law in England; there is another class whose convenience, comfort, and feelings are utterly disregarded—we mean the witnesses. Compelled under heavy penalties to attend and speak, they are treated as if they had done something wrong in being in any way connected with the case in which they come to give evidence. There is scarcely a court in the country where any waiting room, refreshment room, or other convenience is provided for them; even at St. George's Hall, Liverpool, where there are rooms for witnesses, all other essential conveniences of a court are wanting, and the waiting rooms themselves are scarcely furnished. In London the treatment of witnesses is little less than barbarous. At Westminster, winter and summer, they must resort to the great hall, without even a seat, or the means of resting themselves. At Guildhall it is the same, unless they consent to be huddled together in one of the avenues of the court, like pigs in a sty. At the Old Bailey the waiting hall is open to the street, and is one of the greatest scenes of abomination in any part of London. There is no separation of classes; the most delicately-bred lady, unless she chooses to pay an extortionate fee to be admitted to a fœtid gallery just over the dock, or can make sufficient interest with some official to obtain a seat near the bench, must consent to wait until she is called, amongst a crowd of vulgar policemen, low women, thieves' friends, and all that peculiar race that criminal trials always call into the light. She cannot escape with her feelings unoffended, and she will be fortunate if her pockets are not rifled. But the Old Bailey is respectable and agreeable when compared to the courts and entrance halls in which the Westminster and Middlesex magistrates enact the mysteries of their sessions. They must be seen to be understood. The pit of a penny theatre in Tothill-fields could scarcely be more crowded, nauseous, and vile than the corridors of the Sessions Court-house at Westminster. At the Old Bailey crimes of the deepest dye and greatest magnitude are tried; in the Westminster court small dishonesties and trivial assaults constitute the chief interest. A man may pass through life without witnessing a murder, or being the victim of a gigantic fraud; but it is extremely improbable that a man of business will be many years occupied in his calling without being called upon to appear against some petty thief for some act of pilfering or embezzlement. The general public are consequently most practically interested in the improvement of the Sessions-house at Westminster and Hicks's Hall at Clerkenwell; yet these court-houses are, almost without exception, the worst in England.

"Witnesses generally consist of three classes—the professional, legal, or police witnesses; the experts; and the ordinary or general witnesses. All demand the sympathy and care of the public, in whose cause they are engaged; but of all, the last class in particular. The first consists of attornies, their clerks, and policemen—persons who know how to make themselves easy everywhere, and who are acquainted with the purlieus of the courts. The second attend generally by their own consent, and are highly paid for their scientific or 'expert' evidence, many of them, indeed, almost making a profession of their knowledge in this behalf, as everybody knows is the case with the principal medical jurisprudists of the country. These gentlemen may be expected to put up with any necessary inconveniences that their calling demands of them. The inconveniences, however, that we complain of here are not cases of necessity. But it is for the last class or general body of the witnesses that improvement in the arrangement of our court-houses is imperatively called for. In general, they attend to give evidence on compulsion, and unwillingly. There is, indeed, a difference amongst ranks in this respect: the upper classes being the most diffident of attendance, from a natural objection to public gaze, and the absence from their usual occupations; the lower classes are more willing, as they look forward to a paid holiday. All, however, are unused to courts, and have an ordeal new and anxious to undergo. They are sent for to speak the truth according to the best of their recollection, that recollection being likely to be confused from the unaccustomed circumstances under which it is called upon for its exercise.

"An uninitiated person would suppose that people so compelled to a duty would be treated with much consideration, and that for the very purpose for which they are called their bodily strength and the even tone of their nervous system would be carefully preserved. No such thing: present by compulsion, a witness is treated as if of no interest to any one; if he were a client, there would be hopes for him from the counsel and the attornies; or if he could present himself as a point of law, he might excite the interest of the judge; for the time, he is scarcely a human being—he has not even the dignity of being a 'step in the cause'—he is less than a document, no profit to the law; there are no fair copies to be made of him; unhappily it is impossible to ingross him, or to stamp him, or to charge for him by the folio; he is only a living thing, to be sworn, examined, cross-examined, re-examined, to be told to stand down, and then to be shuffled off the scene. And so he is neglected; and as a preparation for his important function, he is starved, wearied, crushed, and suffocated; and at length, when thoroughly exhausted, started into the witness-box to recover himself."

1. THE Commissioners of Patents have humanely commenced the publication of "Abridgments (in classes, and chronologically arranged) of all Specifications of Patented Inventions, from the earliest inrolled to those published under the Act of 1852." "These books," say the commissioners, "are of 12mo. size, and as each is limited to inventions of one class only, they can be sold at prices sufficiently moderate to enable the humblest inventor to examine for himself whether his drawing has been previously patented or not. At the foot of each abstract is given references to notices of the inventions in scientific and other works, and to the reports of law proceedings for infringement, &c. The classes already published, or in the press, are—

Few forms of mental aberration more frequently assume an incurable type than that of euriscomania. Very lately a man insisted on patenting a certain locomotive contrivance, to be drawn by two horses, although the simplest and clearest calculations shewed that his apparatus could not possibly weigh less than thirty tons. But we know no better treatment for milder cases than a cool survey of what has been already done in the same field. When a man who has not yet taken out his patent finds, first, how many great things, far beyond his puny achievement, have been done in the same field, he may take a juster estimate of himself; and when he sees, as in nine cases out of ten he may see, that his idea has occurred from time to time to a dozen men before him, who, often with much more practical knowledge than himself, have tried to make it useful, and have failed, he may be more disposed to listen to the unwelcome advice of judicious friends. This is one great use of these collections. Another, of course, is to facilitate the searches of those who know what they are about, and who, while capable of forming a temperate opinion on the practical value of their inventions, may need assistance in searching for prior claims. For the benefit of all classes of inventors, however, the commissioners would do well to place over their offices, and at the head of all their publications and documents, some pithy warning—like the ominous "limited" of Mr. Lowe's companies. If the obvious quotation from the Inferno is thought too hacknied, we can recommend one which is new and true, and easily remembered—"Invention is the mother of Necessity."

Mr. J. Macgregor (we believe we are right in attributing the abridgment relating to Marine Propulsion to the author of the able work on "The Language of Specifications") has not spared his labour. In addition to the careful abridgment of specifications, commencing appropriately with Wildgoose's, in 1618, for "divers new, apt, or compendious forms or kinds of engines or instruments, and other profitable inventions, ways and means, to make boats for the carrying of burthens and passengers run upon the water as swift in calms and more safe in storms than boats full-sailed in great winds," he gives, in an introduction and notes displaying considerable research, an account of all the methods of propulsion on water known to be employed by nature, or to have been employed by man from the earliest times. Thus we have several recent patents anticipated in the cuttle-fish, who moves himself backwards by ejecting water from a tube. We give the whole of the compact note on animal propulsion:—

"See Isaiah, ch. xxv, ver. 11.—1. The bodies of animals are propelled by legs, arms, fins, tails, paddles, membranes, or cilia, acting like oars in the water. The tail of a fish propels by oblique pressure on the water, (like the blade of an oar in sculling). The tail of a lobster propels it backwards by a smart direct stroke against the water below. 2. The cuttle-fish is propelled forward by fins, and backwards by ejecting water from a tube. The Paper Nautilus (Argonaut) is also propelled by ejecting water, (and not otherwise by its limbs, acting as oars or sails, as is often alleged). 3. The marine animals Velella (with a flat raft or disklike body) and Physalia ('Portuguese Man-of-War,' with a body like a small sac or bladder) float on the water, and are propelled by the wind acting on their extended membranes. Aquatic birds (such as the swan) extend their feathers so as to sail with the wind. 4. Whelks creep on a muscular disk. 5. Pedipes and Truncatella 'loop' like the 'geometric' caterpillars. 6. Others creep by drawing and pushing. 7. The Mud-fish (Lepidosiren) swims and creeps at once. (See Owen's Lectures on Comparative Anatomy of Invertebrate Animals, London, 1855, 2nd ed., p. 605; Carpenter's Physiology, London, 1854, p. 645)."

"Pancirollus (a professor at Padua in A. D. 1587) mentions that he saw an ancient bas-relief, which represented a galley with three wheels on each side, turned by three pair of oxen." There is other authority for this. "In some very ancient manuscripts extant in the King of France's library, it is said the boats by which the Roman army under Claudius Caudex was transported into Sicily were propelled by wheels moved by oxen. And in many old military treatises the substitution of wheels for oars is mentioned." (P. 5).

The Index of Subject-matter is very complete, and every part of the work bears the mark of conscientious labour.

2. Mr. Tolhausen states that his compilation has been made entirely from authentic documents, most of them official, and contained in the library of the Great Seal Patent Office. We have no means of testing its accuracy, but the work appears to have been prepared with care and discretion.

3. Mr. Spence's pamphlet is a homily on this text from the Patent-law Amendment Act, 1852:—"There shall be left with the petition a statement in writing, hereinafter called 'the provisional specification,' signed by or on behalf of the applicant for letters-patent, describing the nature of the said invention." When it is added that the letters-patent are granted for "the said invention" described in the provisional specification, and for nothing else, the vital importance of clearness of conception on the part of the inventor and his agent, and of accuracy of expression on that of the agent, is made apparent. No decision invalidating a patent on the ground of insufficiency in the provisional specification appears to have been as yet reported. Mr. Spence is right in prognosticating that sooner or later such a decision must be pronounced, scattering terror and dismay among the loose practitioners and their victims. We agree with Mr. Spence that it is a very common mistake to act upon the notion, that "supposing the nature of the invention has not been distinctly characterised by the provisional specification, the patent may be supported by supplying in the final specification what was needed for the purpose." The practice of many patent agents in preparing provisional specifications has been culpably loose, and Mr. Spence has done good service in calling attention to this matter.

REGULA GENERALIS.

ORDER OF COURT.—July 18.

The Right Hon. Robert Monsey Lord Cranworth, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, by and with the advice and assistance of the Right Hon. Sir John Romilly, Master of the Rolls, the Right Hon. Sir James Lewis Knight Bruce and the Right Hon. Sir George James Turner, the Lords Justices of the Court of Appeal in Chancery, the Hon. the Vice-Chancellor Sir Richard Torin Kindersley, the Hon. the Vice-Chancellor Sir John Stuart, and the Hon. the Vice-Chancellor Sir William Page Wood, doth order and direct as follows:—

1. The Orders of the 11th April, 1842, shall be amended, as to Numbers XI and XII, in manner following, (that is to say):—

XI. If any party or person who is by an order or decree made in any suit or matter ordered to pay money, or to do any other act in a limited time, shall, after due service of such order or decree, refuse or neglect to obey the same according to the exigency thereof, the party or person prosecuting such order or decree shall, at the expiration of the time limited for the performance thereof, be entitled to a writ or writs of attachment against the disobedient party or person; and in case such party or person shall be taken or detained in custody under any such writ of attachment without obeying the same order or decree, then the party or person prosecuting the same order or decree shall, upon the sheriff's return that the party or person has been so taken or detained, be entitled to a commission of sequestration against the estate and effects of the disobedient party or person; and in case the sheriff shall make the return non est inventus to such writ or writs of attachment, the party or person prosecuting such order or decree shall be entitled, at his option, either to a commission of sequestration in the first instance, or otherwise to an order for the serjeant-at-arms, and to such other process as he hath hitherto been entitled to upon a return non est inventus made by the commissioners named in a commission of rebellion issued for the non-performance of an order or decree.

XII. Every order or decree made in any suit or matter, requiring any party or person to do an act thereby ordered, shall state the time, or the time after service of the order or decree, within which the act is to be done; and upon the copy of the order or decree which shall be served upon the party or person required to obey the same, there shall be indorsed a memorandum in the words or to the effect following, viz.:—

"If you, the within-named A. B., neglect to obey this order [or, decree] by the time therein limited, you will be liable to be arrested under a writ of attachment issued out of the High Court of Chancery, or by the serjeant-at-arms attending the same court, and also be liable to have your estate sequestered for the purpose of compelling you to obey the same order [or, decree]."

2. If it shall appear upon the return of any writ of fieri facias, or any writ of elegit, issued in pursuance of the General Orders of the 10th May, 1839, that the person against whom such writ shall have been so issued is a beneficed clerk, and has no goods or chattels nor any lay fee in the bailiwick of the sheriff to whom such writ shall have been directed, the person to whom the sum of money or costs mentioned in such writ is or are payable shall, immediately after such writ, with such return, shall be filed as of record, be at liberty to sue out one or more writ or writs of fieri facias de bonis ecclesiasticis, or one or more writ or writs of sequestrari facias, in the form stated in the schedule hereto, or as near thereto as the circumstances of the case may allow.

3. On every such writ of fieri facias de bonis ecclesiasticis, or writ of sequestrari facias, so to be issued as aforesaid, there shall be indorsed the words "By the Court," and also thereunder the calling (if any) and place of residence (if any) of the party or person against whom such writ shall be issued, and also the name and residence or place of business of the party or solicitor at whose instance the same shall be issued; and every such writ shall be also indorsed for the sum to be taken or levied, according to the form used upon like writs issuing out of the superior courts of common law.

4. Such writs, when sealed, shall be delivered to the bishop, and shall be executed by him, as nearly as may be, in the same manner in which he doth or ought to execute such like writs issuing out of the superior courts of common law; and such writs, when returned by the bishop, shall be delivered to the parties or solicitors by whom respectively they were sued out, and shall thereupon be filed as of record in the office of the Clerks of Records and Writs of this Court; and for the execution of such writs the bishop or his officers shall not take or be allowed any fees other than such as are or shall be from time to time allowed by lawful authority for the execution of the like writs issuing out of the superior courts of common law.

5. For every such writ so to be issued in pursuance of these Orders, there shall be allowed to the solicitor at whose instance any such writ shall be issued the sum of 6s. 8d. for instructions for the said writ, and the sum of 13s. 4d. for preparing the same, and a fee of 1l. shall be paid by means of a stamp for examining and stamping every such writ at the office of the Clerks of Records and Writs, and there shall be also allowed to such solicitor the further sum of 6s. 8d. for attending to lodge the same at the bishop's registry, and for attending to instruct the officer charged with the execution of such writ.

We command you, that of the ecclesiastical goods of C. D., clerk in your diocese, you cause to be made £——, which the said C. D., lately before us in our Court of Chancery, in a certain cause or certain causes [as the case may be], wherein A. B. is plaintiff and C. D. is defendant, or in a certain matter there depending, intituled "In the matter of E. F.," [as the case may be], by a decree or order [as the case may be] of our said Court, bearing date the —— day of ——, was decreed or ordered [as the case may be] to be paid by the said C. D. to the said A. B., together with interest on the said sum of £——, at the rate of 4l. per centum per annum from the —— day of ——, and have that money, together with such interest as aforesaid, before us, in our said court, immediately after the execution hereof, to be rendered to the said A. B., for that our sheriff of —— returned to us in our said court on ——, [or, at a day now past], that the said C. D. had not any goods or chattels or any lay fee in his bailiwick whereof he could cause to be made the said £—— and interest aforesaid, or any part thereof, and that the said C. D. was a beneficed clerk, (to wit), rector of the rectory [or, vicar of the vicarage] and parish church of ——, in the said sheriff's county, and within your diocese [as in the return]; and in what manner you shall have executed this our writ make appear to us in our said court immediately after the execution hereof, and have you there then this writ. No. II.—Fieri Facias to the Archbishop, de Bonis Ecclesiasticis, during the Vacancy of a Bishop's See.

Victoria, [&c., as in No. I.], to the Right Reverend Father in God ——, by Divine providence Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate of all England and Metropolitan, greeting. We command you, that of the ecclesiastical goods of C. D., clerk, in the diocese of ——, which is within the province of Canterbury, as ordinary of that church, the episcopal see of —— now being vacant, you cause to be made [&c.; conclude as in the preceding form.]

No. III.—Writ of Sequestrari Facias.

Victoria, by the grace of God of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Queen, Defender of the Faith, to the Right Reverend Father in God (John), by Divine permission Lord Bishop of ——, greeting. Whereas we lately commanded our sheriff of —— that he should omit not by reason of any liberty of his county, but that he should enter the same, and cause to be made [if after the return to a fieri facias] or delivered [if after the return to an elegit, &c., recite the former writ]. And whereupon our said sheriff of ——, on —— [or, at a day past], returned to us in our said Court of Chancery that the said C. D. was a beneficed clerk; that is to say, rector of the rectory [or, vicar of the vicarage] and parish church of ——, in the county of ——, and which said rectory and parish church were within your diocese, and that he had not any goods or chattels or any lay fee in his bailiwick [here follow the words of the sheriff's return]. Therefore we command you that you enter into the said rectory [or, vicarage] and parish church of ——, and take and sequester the same into your possession, and that you hold the same in your possession until you shall have levied the said £—— and interest aforesaid of the rents, tithes, rent-charges in lieu of tithes, oblations, obventions, fruits, issues, and profits thereof, and other ecclesiastical goods in your diocese of and belonging to the said rectory and parish church of ——, and to the said C. D. as rector thereof, to be rendered to the said A. B.; and what you shall do therein make appear to us in our said court immediately after the execution hereof; and have you there then this writ. Witness ourself at Westminster, the —— day of ——, in the year of our Lord ——.

When he (Lord Campbell) was upon the bench he always had this work by him, and no Statutes were ever referred to by the Bar which he could not find in it."

STARKIE'S LAW OF EVIDENCE.—NEW EDITION.

A PRACTICAL TREATISE of the LAW of EVIDENCE. By THOMAS STARKIE, Esq. Fourth Edition, with very considerable alterations and additions; incorporating the Statutes and reported Cases to the time of publication. By G. M. DOWDESWELL and J. G. MALCOLM, Esqrs., Barristers at Law. Just published, in 1 vol. royal 8vo., price 1*l*. 16*s*. cloth.

"Fortunately for the Profession, the new edition has been intrusted to gentlemen, of whom one is well known, not only as a ripe and accomplished lawyer, (doctrinâ malidus), but as a judicious editor, knowing how to withhold as well as how to apply his hand. Amid the present plague of reports mere industry is not sufficient to qualify even a second-rate editor. . . . . It is evident that the editors have not been blinded by their respect for the author, but have altered, corrected, and amended wherever they have seen occasion. Such a course could not be pursued safely upon a small stock of learning or of judgment; and in our opinion it has been pursued, not only with safety, but with manifest advantage to the book; so that the fourth edition of Starkie is to the existing law what the first edition was to the law in 1824. . . . . We wish we had some means of identifying Mr. Malcolm's portions of the work. As it is, being hitherto unknown in authorship, he must be content with the praise of having borne a part where all was good."—Jurist.

"It is also the only work of which a new edition has been brought out at such a time as to render it possible that it should apply to practice, with any degree of consideration and accuracy, the modern changes in the law. . . . . We think the editors will have gone far towards restoring the admirable work of Mr. Starkie to its original character of the best work on the law of evidence which has yet been produced."—Legal Observer.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, AUGUST 1, 1857.

The Court of Queen's Bench has lately decided an interesting point upon the law of life insurance. (Wheelton and Others v. Hardisty and Others, Q. B., July 4). Loose dicta, and marginal notes hastily adopted into text-books, had led to an impression that referees are the agents of the party effecting the insurance, so as to bind him by misrepresentations or fraud on their part. Upon principle, it was difficult to understand why persons whose names were merely mentioned as being likely to give information to the office regarding the life insured should be clothed with so extensive an authority, while the hardship and inconvenience were obvious of allowing confidential answers, which the party insuring could neither know nor correct, to deprive him or his family of the provision which he had been endeavouring to make, by taking annual sums from his income during his life, or that of the cestui que vie. The Court of Queen's Bench, pressed by these considerations, and the want of real authority against them, have now decided that the referees are not the agents of the party insuring, and also, that if the insurance be on the life of another, the life insured is not the agent of the party insuring. This relation, however, may of course be created between the parties by express contract; but, in the absence thereof, it is not to be raised by implication. The real question in all such cases is, what is the contract between the parties? It should also be observed, that a party employed by another to effect the insurance, as a broker to make an insurance on a vessel, stands in a wholly different position from a referee. The facts which gave rise to the decision were shortly these:—The Norwich Union insured the life of Mr. Jodrell with the Westminster. In the proposal they referred to Mr. A. as the usual medical attendant, and to Mr. B. as the intimate friend of Jodrell. Answers were obtained from them relating to his health and habits, and a policy was granted, which did not, in terms, make the answers of the referees or of the life insured a part of the contract. The jury found, in an action on this policy, that the plaintiffs had acted bonâ fide throughout the transaction, but that Jodrell and his referees had made fraudulent representations to the insurance office. In support of the contention that their fraud should avoid the policy, all the cases upon the subject were cited; and to these we propose briefly to call attention, pointing out their main features with reference to the late decision.

The first case is Fitzherbert v. Mather, (1790), (1 T.R. 12), but that may be disposed of on the short ground that the fraud on the underwriter was practised by a person (Thomas) who had been employed to effect the policy. He was, therefore, clearly the agent of the insurer.

In Maynard v. Rhodes, (1824), (5 Dowl. & R. 266; better reported in 1 Car. & P. 360), the plaintiff had effected a policy for his own benefit on the life of Colonel Lyon, who, instead of naming his usual medical attendant, referred to a person as such who had only once visited him, and who did not know of a disorder of long standing with which the colonel was afflicted. The policy was held to be void, and this case has been made the foundation of other decisions, and of statements in text-books, that the life insured is the agent of the party insuring, so as to avoid the policy by misrepresentation. When, however, the case is carefully considered, it will be found not to support any such doctrine. The report is scanty, and the policy is not set out, but we may gather from it that a true answer as to the medical attendant was made one of the conditions of the policy; and further, that the plaintiff allowed Colonel Lyon to answer as to a matter which the plaintiff himself should have furnished information upon—as a party proposing to effect an insurance is required to name the usual medical attendant of the life to be insured. Thus, at the trial, Abbott, C. J., said, "Though the plaintiff was an annuity creditor of Colonel Lyon, yet if he allowed the colonel to make these representations when the policy was effected, he is bound by them;" and afterwards, in banc, Bayley, J., said, "The representation is made part of the policy, and therefore the bargain is only conditional." (See 1 Car. & P. 362, 303; and this case commented upon in Everett v. Desborough, 5 Bing. 512, 513).

Morrison v. Muspratt, (1827), (4 Bing. 60; 12 Moore, 231), was another case in which the misrepresentation was as to the usual medical attendant. The policy is not set out, and it does not clearly appear from the report that the insurance was effected by one person on the life of another; but at all events the question was one for the party proposing the insurance to answer, and it is consistent with the report that he knew that the party named was not the usual medical attendant. The only point raised in the case appears to have been as to the materiality of the information withheld, and not as to the agency of the party withholding it.

Lindenau v. Desborough, (1828), (8 B. & Cr. 586; 3 Car. & P. 353), was an action on one of the Atlas policies. A creditor had insured the life of Duke Frederick of Saxe-Gotha, and the medical man referred to had falsely stated that he was not afflicted with any disorder tending to shorten life. The policy was held to be void, but by its terms (as set out in Everett v. Desborough, infra) it appears that this question was required to be answered by the party proposing the insurance, and that the answer was made (inter alia) the basis of the policy. It also appears that the plaintiff himself knew of the fact concealed, for we find Lord Tenterden, who presided at the trial, afterwards using this language in banc—"I said I should direct the jury to find for the defendant if they thought the plaintiff had failed to communicate to the insurers any material circumstance within his knowledge."

In Everett v. Desborough, (1829), (5 Bing. 503)—another of the Atlas policies—the plaintiff had insured the life of James House, and had told the agent of the company to make the requisite inquiries, and do all that was proper, as he (the plaintiff) knew nothing of House. A false statement was made to the agent by House as to his medical attendant, "Vicary" being named instead of "Harvey." The paper containing this misrepresentation was shewn to the plaintiff, who said, "I dare say it is all correct;" and on another part of the paper he signed a declaration relating to the health of House. The policy was avoided; but here again the misrepresentation related to a matter upon which the plaintiff himself by the policy was to give information, and the answer (among others) was made the basis of the policy. This case was also decided on the authority of Maynard v. Rhodes, in which, as we have seen, the truth of the answer was made an express condition in the policy. The marginal note, however, in Everett v. Desborough is thus broadly stated:—In an insurance on the life of another, the life insured, if applied to for information, is, in giving such information, impliedly the agent of the party insuring, who is bound by his statements, and must suffer if they are false.

Swete v. Fairlie, (1833), (6 Car. & P. 1), comes next in order of time, but does not have any material bearing on the question, except for a dictum therein of Lord Denman at Nisi Prius, which was not necessary for the decision of the case.

In Huckman v. Fernie, (1838), (3 M. & W. 505), a husband insured his wife's life, and sent her to the office to answer the questions that might be put. She was not asked as to certain diseases from which she was suffering, and said nothing as to them. The plaintiff had no knowledge of them, and therefore a plea alleging that she had these diseases to his knowledge, and he neglected to inform the company of them, was held not to be supported by the evidence. This case decides that the life insured is not the general agent of the insurer, so as to affect him by mere concealment. Lord Abinger said—"If she had been sent to effect the policy, she would then be the agent of the husband for that purpose, and any concealment by her would be concealment by him, and would have vitiated the policy. . . . She was no otherwise his agent than to answer particular questions; . . . and if they had put to her any question of a kind calculated to elicit a particular fact said to be concealed, it might be questioned then whether or no she was not his agent for that purpose." With reference to the latter part of this dictum, which at most amounts to the expression only of a doubt, it would seem that in this particular case she was the husband's agent to answer such questions as had been sent to him, or should have been answered by him, for printed questions had been put to the husband, and he sent his wife to answer them. (See p. 507). It also appears by the case that her answers were signed or otherwise adopted by him, and his own declaration as to her state of health was made the basis of the policy.

Rawlins v. Desborough, (1840), (2 Moo. & R. 328), was an action on another Atlas policy, and also decides that the life insured is not the general agent of the insurer, and therefore his non-communication of facts as to which he was not interrogated does not avoid the policy. At p. 334 is a long note upon this subject, written by the late Mr. Frederic Robinson, and therefore, as might be expected, well worthy of perusal.

Such, then, were the decisions which the Court of Queen's Bench was called upon to review, and the result may be again stated in a few words, namely, that in life insurance neither the life insured nor the referees are the agents of the person proposing the insurance, so as to affect the policy by their representations or their concealment, unless he makes them his agents for that purpose, either by his contract or his acts.

THE COPYRIGHT ACTS CONFOOLIDATION BILL, 1857.

Mr. Hansard has printed this as a bill for the consolidation of the Law of Copyright. But he is mistaken. The design of the bill, if we can attribute design to anything so incoherent, is to make very wild work of the law in the way of alteration. Its effect will be chiefly to console the promoters of "The Property of Married Women Bill" and "The Wills of British Subjects domiciled Abroad Bill" for the ridicule with which their unlucky attempts upon the character of the statute-book have been received, and it may serve as a foil to the labours of the Statute-law Commission.

Mr. Wilson and the Chancellor of the Exchequer cannot be acquitted of blame for bringing in a bill on so important a subject without first submitting it to the criticism of at least one lawyer of sound mind and average attainments. As, however, the bill enjoys Government sanction, we do not expect our readers to rate it as it deserves, upon our word. They shall judge for themselves. It is intituled "A Bill for consolidating the Laws relating to Copyright in Works of Literature and Art," and recites that "it is expedient that the several acts now in force relating to copyright in works of literature and art, as well as the several acts relating to international copyright, should be consolidated into one act."

"Sect. 1. The several acts and parts of acts set forth in Schedule (A.) to this act annexed are hereby repealed, to the extent to which such acts or parts of acts are by such schedule expressed to be repealed."

The schedule comprises the whole of the existing acts relating to British, colonial, and foreign copyright in literary works, (including lectures and dramatic entertainments), engravings, and sculpture, and the clauses in the Customs Acts relating to the importation of pirated copies.

"2. Provided always, that notwithstanding such repeal of the said acts, every copyright which shall be subsisting at the time of the passing of this act shall continue in force till the expiration of such copyright, and shall be the property of the then proprietor"—[The copyright is to continue in force until it ceases to be in force. The "then proprietor" must be either the proprietor at the time the act passed, or the proprietor at the expiration of the copyright. If the former, he seems to have an inalienable property in it]—"and with regard to all offences or injuries committed against any such copyright before this act shall come into operation, every penalty imposed and every remedy given by the said acts in relation to any such offence or injury shall be applicable as if such acts had not been repealed; but with regard to such offences or injuries committed against any such copyright after this act shall come into operation, every penalty imposed and every remedy given by this act in relation to any such offence or injury shall be applicable as if such copyright had been conferred by this act: provided also, that nothing in this act contained shall affect, alter, or vary any right subsisting at the time of passing this act, except as herein expressly enacted; and also contracts, agreements, and obligations made and entered into before the passing of this act shall remain in full force.

"3. All copyright shall be deemed personal property, and be transferable by sale or bequest, and in case of intestacy shall be subject to the same law of distribution as other personal property, and in Scotland shall be deemed to be personal or moveable estate, and shall be vested in the original proprietor or his assigns for the time being, and such assigns shall have all the same rights and privileges attaching thereto as any original proprietor from whom such copyright may have been derived."

The next section, however, provides, in very choice English, that "such assigns" shall not have all the same rights and privileges as the original proprietor.

"4. The copyright in the following works of literature and art first published in the British dominions, and whether the author be a British subject or not, and whether he be resident in the British dominions or not"—[So much for Jefferys v. Boosey]—"shall be vested in the parties for the periods hereafter stated in relation thereto respectively:

> "The copyright in books, except books given or bequeathed to the 'universities or colleges,' published in the lifetime of the author, shall be the property of the author or his assigns during the term of the natural life of such author, and for seven years afterwards, or for forty-two years from the date of first publication if the latter be the longest term, unless such copyright shall have been disposed of by the author for any consideration other than natural love and affection for a shorter period, when such copyright shall expire, unless the author"—[Why not his personal representative? No concurrence of the assignee required]—"shall, before the expiration of such shorter period, avail himself of the benefit of this act, for himself or any assignee, by causing a minute thereof, in the Form No. 1 in Schedule (B.) to this act annexed"—[The form is inapplicable]—"to be entered in the book of registry at Stationers' Hall, in which case the copyright shall endure for the remainder of the full term of copyright prescribed by this act, and be the property of himself or his assigns, as in such minute expressed:"

An arrangement frequently made by an author with his publisher is, to assign the copyright to the latter until the first edition or a fixed number of copies is sold off. The bill would cut down the entire copyright to the duration of such first edition or the sale of the limited number of copies. What does this mean? It means that the framer of the bill has found a clause in the Copyright Act of 1842, and has "consolidated" it, as he might consolidate a Geneva watch by hammering it into a deal board. When it was proposed by Lord Mahon's Act to extend the term of copyright from the author's life or twenty-eight years, to seven years beyond the author's life or forty-two years, it was determined to include copyrights then existing in published works; but in order at once to give the benefit to those for whom it was intended, and to withhold it from mere trade assigns, who had never bargained for it, the act judiciously provided, that in case at the passing of the act the copyright of any work was vested in an assignee for value, the extension should not apply to that work without a joint declaration by the author or his representative and the proprietor. This piece of mechanism the framer of the bill has found, and, not understanding, has "spoiled its clicking," as we have seen. The enactment is still important, and has several times within our knowledge been called into operation. But as regards works within its scope, (i. e. those published before July, 1842), the bill repeals it, and provides no substitute. As regards works published after that time, such an enactment is absurd, and is therefore inserted in the bill.

> "The copyright in books, except as aforesaid, first published after the death of the author, shall be the property of the proprietor of the author's manuscript for forty-two years from the first publication thereof:
> "The copyright in any periodical work, such work, or the volumes, parts, essays, articles, or portions constituting the same, being composed for publication in or as part thereof by any person employed for that purpose by or on account of the publisher, projector, conductor, or proprietor thereof, under any contract vesting the copyright therein in the latter, shall be the property of such publisher, proprietor, conductor, editor, or projector during his natural life and for seven years afterwards, but without the right of publishing in a separate form any essay, article, or portion of the work so composed by any person so employed as aforesaid, which right shall be vested in the author after twenty-eight years from the first publication thereof in such periodical, or earlier if there be any contract, expressed or implied, reserving to the author such right of separate publication before the expiration of such twenty-eight years:"

The clause which this is intended to replace, relating as it does to a difficult subject, is among the worst of the clauses in the ill-drawn act of 1842, and many questions have arisen on it. It is not limited to periodical works. By the bill the copyright is to endure for seven years beyond the natural life of the proprietor. How will this apply to articles in the Solicitors' Journal, which belongs to an incorporated company? How will it apply to a common partnership?

> "The copyright in books bequeathed or otherwise given by the author of the same, or his personal representative, to or in trust for the 'universities or colleges,'' shall be vested in the said 'universities or colleges' for the period for which the same shall be bequeathed or given, or if not bequeathed to them for any limited period, so long as such books shall be printed only at their own printing presses within the said universities or colleges respectively, and for their sole benefit and advantage; but the said universities and colleges shall have the right to sell their copyright in books so bequeathed, in which case the copyright shall endure only for the term given by this act to other books:"

The framer of this bill, as we have seen, and shall further see, holds himself in no way bound to respect the existing law, yet he preserves the unjust and impolitic privilege which was given by the stat. 15 Geo. 3, c. 53, omitting the qualification that the gift must be "for the advancement of learning and other beneficial purposes of education."

> "The copyright in any new and original sculpture, model, or cast shall vest in the person who shall first make or cause the same to be made, or his assigns, for the term of fourteen years from the date of publication thereof, and for the further term of fourteen years if such person shall be living at the end of the said first-mentioned term, provided that his name and the date of publication be marked on such sculpture, model, or cast:"

What is a "new and original sculpture, model, or cast?" In the existing acts (38 Geo. 3, c. 71, and 54 Geo. 3, c. 56) some attempt at explanation is made, and particularly a cast, as distinguished from an original design, is shewn to mean a cast from nature.

> "The copyright in any lecture, musical composition, or dramatic piece, not printed or published by the author thereof or his assigns, shall be vested in the author or his assigns, together with the sole right of delivering, representing, or performing, or causing the same to be delivered, represented, or performed, at any place of dramatic or public entertainment in the British dominions, and the sole right of printing and publishing the same, for the term of his natural life, and for seven years afterwards, or for forty-two years from the date of the first delivery, representation, or performance thereof, if the latter be the longer term:
> Provided, that nothing herein contained shall extend to any lecture, or the printing, copying, or publishing any lecture, or parts thereof, of the delivery of which two days' notice in writing prior to such delivery shall not have been given to two justices living within five miles from the place of delivery, or to any lecture delivered in any university or public school or college, or on any public foundation, or by any individual in virtue of or according to any gift, endowment, or foundation:"

The exclusion of lectures delivered without notice to two justices, being ingeniously levelled at the only case which it cannot hit—that of seditious lectures, delivered without a view to copyright—is copied from the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 65. But the existing distinction between unlimited or perpetual copyright in lectures until they have been printed and published with the proprietor's license, and the copyright which, upon lawful publication, commences in them as ordinary literary works, and the distinction between the right to represent a dramatic work and the literary copyright in it, are here consolidated into a jumble, one effect of which would be to make the term of copyright in an unpublished lecture or drama commence from the first delivery or representation; and another would be to make an assignment of a play pass the right to authorise representations of it, (see the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 22)—a right which the existing law has properly made inalienable otherwise than by an entry on the registry; so that under the bill a manager, after paying the author for fifty nights' performance, might be made to account for the whole profits to some unregistered and unknown assignee of the right to multiply printed copies of the play.

If a lecturer is so ill-advised as to deliver his lecture in a university or public school or college, he is to forfeit his copyright, the saving of the existing law in the 5th section of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 65, not being repeated.

> "The copyright in any print, map, chart, or plan shall vest in the person who shall have first engraved or procured the same to be engraved, or his assigns, for the term of twenty-eight years, to commence from the first publication thereof, provided his name be engraved on each plate and printed on each print."

What will the Manchester people say to this, which, read in the fog of the interpretation clause, protects their patterns for twenty-eight years? There is, however, no explanation of the word "engraved." The important provision, that the engraving shall bear the date of the first publication, is omitted.

"5. Her Majesty may, by any Order in Council, direct that the author, and his personal representatives, of any books, prints, dramatic pieces, musical compositions, articles of sculpture, and other works of art, to be defined in such Order, which shall, after a future time to be specified in such Order, be first published, produced, performed, or represented in any foreign country to be named in such Order, shall have the privilege of copyright therein, or sole liberty of representation or performance, as the case may be, within the British dominions, for the same period as is granted by this act to the authors of the like productions first published, produced, represented, or performed in the United Kingdom, unless limited to any shorter period by such Order; and her Majesty may, by any further Order or Orders in Council, from time to time revoke, alter, or vary any such Order or Orders, or make any other Order or Orders in relation thereto and in lieu thereof, with similar power to revoke, alter, or vary the same."

The existing International Copyright Acts are to be repealed, saving copyrights existing when the bill passes. After the passing of the bill no work to be first published in France, Belgium, Prussia, &c. will be protected here until the arrival of some "future time," to be specified in some future Order in Council.

"6. The author of any such book or dramatic piece to which the privilege of copyright is by Order in Council extended, and his assigns," [In sect. 5 it is "the author and his personal representatives"], "shall, so long as such Order in Council remains in force, be empowered to prevent the publication, unless with the authority of the author," [Neither assigns nor personal representatives], "of any translation of such book, or the representation of any translation of such dramatic piece, within the British dominions, for any time specified in such Order not exceeding five years from the time at which the authorised translation of such book or dramatic piece, or each part thereof if published in parts, may be first published or publicly represented, and the author or his assigns shall have copyright in such translation during the time so specified; provided that nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent fair imitations or adaptations to the English stage of any dramatic piece or musical composition published in any foreign country.

"7. Any article of political discussion or otherwise" [Why mention political discussion, then?] "which has been published in any newspaper or periodical in a foreign country to which the privilege of copyright is extended, may, if the source from which the same is taken be acknowledged, be republished or translated in any newspaper or periodical in this country, unless the author has signified his intention of preserving the copyright therein, and the right of translating the same, in some conspicuous part of the newspaper or periodical in which the same was first published, in which case the same shall, without the formalities required by this act, receive the same protection as is thereby extended to books by the provisions relating to international copyright."

What will the Times say to this? As the law stands, (15 & 16 Vict. c. 12, s. 7), any article of political discussion published in any newspaper or periodical abroad may be republished here, whether the author signifies his intention to reserve the copyright or not; and it is most important that this should be so. The bill proposes that it should not be so. But the blunder in the late act, of not requiring registration here as a condition of protection to literary works appearing in periodicals abroad, is, of course, repeated.

"8. Registers for the registration of the proprietorship in any copyright, right of representation or performance, permitted by this act to be registered according to Form No. 2 in the Schedule (B.) to this act," [The form will not apply to a right of representation or performance; and there is no permission to register such a right], "and also of any assignment or license affecting the same, according to Form No. 3 in Schedule (B.) to this act, shall be kept at the hall of the Stationers' Company in London by the registrar, and such registers shall, during the official hours of business, be open to the inspection of any person on payment of 1*s.* for each entry searched for or inspected; and the said registrar shall, when required during the official hours of business, give a copy of any entry in such books, certified under his hand and impressed with the stamp of the said company, to be by them provided for such purpose, to any person requiring the same, on payment to the said registrar of the sum of 1*s.*; and any copy of any such entry so certified and impressed shall be received in evidence in all courts and in all summary proceedings, and shall be primâ facie proof of the proprietorship or assignment of copyright, right of representation or performance, or license, as therein expressed, but subject to be rebutted by other evidence.

"9. The author of or proprietor of the copyright in any book or periodical work, or of any dramatic piece or musical composition, whether British or foreign, to which the privilege of copyright extends, and his assigns, may require an entry thereof to be made in the register by presenting to the registrar a request for that purpose according to the Form No. 4 of Schedule (B.) to this act, and on payment to the registrar of the sum of 5*s.* in respect of such book if first published in the British dominions, (except such as are bequeathed or given to the universities and colleges), and of 1*s.* if first published in such foreign country, and of 6*d.* only if registered by the said universities or colleges as their copyright."

The fee for office copies is reduced from 5*s.* to 1*s.* So far good. But the cost of registration is left at 5*s.* for Britons and 1*s.* for foreigners as before, except that the universities are let in to register in formâ pauperis for 6*d.* No registration of copyright in engravings and sculptures. No registration of copyright in an article in a periodical, &c. The existing provisions for registration of right to an unpublished dramatic work (5 & 6 Vict. c. 5, s. 20) are omitted.

"10. In case of any assignment by the registered proprietor of the whole or any portion of his interest in any copyright, right of representation or performance, the assignee, with the consent of such registered proprietor, may require an entry thereof to be made in the register, by presenting to the registrar a request and concurrence in the Form No. 5 of Schedule (B.) to this act, and on payment of the fee of 5*s.* to the registrar; and any entry made in pursuance thereof shall operate as a legal assignment, be free from stamp duty, and have the same force as an assignment by deed."

"In case of any assignment, the assignee may require an entry thereof to be made, and such entry shall operate as an assignment." That is to say, given an assignment, the assignee may cause an entry to be made which shall operate as an assignment. But being already assignee, what does he want with a second assignment?

"11. In order to entitle to the protection of this act the translation of any original work (including articles in any newspaper or periodical, and afterwards published in a separate form) first published in any foreign country to which the privilege of copyright is extended, the author of such original work must cause the same to be registered in manner above prescribed within three months after first publication thereof in such foreign country, and such translation must be so registered within three months after its publication.

"12. If the registrar refuse or neglect to enter in the register any copyright work entitled to registry under this act, or to give any certified copy of any entry therein on demand being made by the person entitled to demand such registry or certified copy, the fee for the same being first tendered to the registrar, he shall forfeit the sum of 20*l.* for each such refusal or neglect." [To whom?]

"13. Every entry made in pursuance of this act of any first publication shall be primâ facie evidence of a rightful first publication, but subject to be rebutted by other evidence; and if any person shall wilfully make or cause to be made any false entry in the register, or shall wilfully produce or cause to be tendered in evidence any paper falsely purporting to be a copy of any entry in the said register, he shall be guilty of an indictable misdemeanour, and shall be punished accordingly.

"14. The publisher of every book published in the British dominions shall deliver or cause to be delivered one printed copy of the whole of the first edition, together with all maps, prints, or other engravings belonging thereto, or of any second or subsequent edition if the first or some preceding edition shall not have been delivered, and of every subsequent edition which shall contain any addition or alteration, the same to be finished and coloured in the same manner as the best copies of the same, whether bound, sewed, or stitched together, shall be published, and upon the best paper on which the same shall be printed, at the several places and withim the times hereinafter mentioned in relation thereto respectively:

At the British Museum, if the first publication, sale, or exposure for sale be within the bills of mortality, within one month thereafter:

If the first publication, sale, or exposure for sale be in any other part of the United Kingdom, within three months thereafter:

If the first publication, sale, or exposure for sale be in any other part of the British dominions, within twelve months thereafter:

At Stationers' Hall for transmission to and deposit at the following libraries, viz. the Bodleian Library at Oxford, the Public Library at Cambridge, the Library of the Faculty of Advocates at Edinburgh, the Library of the College of the Holy and Undivided Trinity of Queen Elizabeth near Dublin, within one month after demand in writing under the hand of the person duly authorised by the said Company of Stationers, or by the librarian of any of the said libraries, to demand and receive the same; provided that such demand shall be left at the place of abode of the publisher of such book within twelve months after its first publication:

If any publisher shall be desirous of delivering the copy of any book so demanded on behalf of any of the said libraries at such library, it shall be lawful for him to deliver the same free of expense at such library to the officer appointed for such purpose, and such delivery shall be held as equivalent to and accepted in lieu of delivery to the aforesaid officer of the Stationers' Company."

The publishers should look to this. If a publisher binds a copy of a new work in morocco or russia, "regardless of expense," and sells it before the Museum and Stationers' Hall are satisfied, he must give five copies as handsomely bound to the public libraries; and he must give copies on the best paper to the universities, as well as to the British Museum.

"15. The author of any book or of any dramatic piece or musical composition, if printed or published in any foreign country to which the privilege of copyright is extended, and of any translation thereof, shall deliver or cause to be delivered to the registrar one copy of the whole, whether in one or more volumes, of every such work, together with all maps and prints relating thereto, one copy of the whole of every second or subsequent edition thereof which shall contain any addition or alterations, and one copy of every print or engraving; and with regard to such translation, shall also deliver to the said registrar one copy of the original work from which such translation is made, with a notification on the title page, or if published in parts on the title page of the first part, or if no title page on some conspicuous part of the work, of his intention to reserve the right of translation; and every such original work intended for translation shall be so delivered within three months after the first publication thereof in the foreign country, and the translation thereof within twelve months afterwards, unless published in parts, in which case each part of such original work shall be delivered within three months after its publication, and the translation of each part within twelve months after delivery of the part of which it is a translation." [The existing provisions for the registration of engravings and sculptures are omitted. The existing law says that the copies received by the registrar are to be deposited in the British Museum. The bill leaves them for the edification of the Stationers' Company.]

"16. All such deliveries as aforesaid shall be made between the hours of ten o'clock in the forenoon and four o'clock in the afternoon of any days except Sundays, and such other days as are at the said places of delivery duly appointed to be observed and kept as public holidays, to the officer duly appointed at such places to receive the same, and which officer shall give receipts in writing for the copies so delivered to him, and be responsible for the due deposit thereof within one month thereafter in the several places for which they are delivered, and such receipts shall be sufficient proof of such delivery.

"17. If any publisher of any such book, or of any second or subsequent edition required by this act to be delivered, shall neglect to deliver the same pursuant to this act, he shall forfeit for every such default, besides the value of such copy of the book or edition which he ought to have delivered, a sum not exceeding 5*l*., to be recovered by the librarian or other officer (properly authorised) of the library for the use whereof such copy should have been delivered, in a summary way, on conviction before two justices of the peace for the county or place where the publisher making default shall reside, or by action of debt or other proceeding of the like nature, at the suit of such librarian or other officer, in any court of record in the United Kingdom, in which action, if the plaintiff shall obtain a verdict, he shall recover the costs reasonably incurred, to be taxed as between attorney and client.

"18. The registered proprietor of the copyright in any book first printed and published in the British dominions, or in any foreign country to which the privilege of copyright is extended, and which shall be registered after the passing of this act, or his agent, may give to the Commissioners of her Majesty's Customs notice in writing of such copyright, such notice to be in the Form No. 6 of Schedule (B.) to this act, and to contain the particulars specified therein, so far as they are applicable, together with a copy of the entry of the registry of such book, duly certified by and under the hand of the registrar, and for which certified copy such registrar shall be entitled to the fee of 1*s*.

"19. The said commissioners shall cause to be made, and publicly exposed at the custom-house of the several ports in the United Kingdom, printed lists of all books of which such notice shall be given to them as aforesaid, and also from time to time deliver to the Board of Trade so many copies of such lists as such board may require, for transmission to her Majesty's possessions abroad, for public exposure there, at such places and in such manner as the Board of Trade may direct: provided always, that at the expiration of forty-two years from the date or publication of any book inserted in the same lists the said commissioners shall cause such book to be struck out of the said lists, unless the proprietor of the copyright shall then give further notice that the author is still alive, or has died within seven years; and if such further notice of the author being alive be not renewed at the expiration of each succeeding twelve months, the book shall be struck off the lists at the end of seven years from the last further notice.

"20. The importation into the British dominions of pirated copies of any book included in the lists prescribed by sect. 19 shall be prohibited, unless imported with the sanction or authority in writing of the proprietor or other person upon whose notice such book shall have been inserted in such lists, and all copies imported contrary hereto shall be forfeited, and may be seized by an officer of customs or inland revenue, and shall become the property of the proprietor, and be delivered to him, if claimed by him within three months after such seizure, on payment of the duty of customs due thereon, and if not so claimed, shall be destroyed; and the importer thereof, if such copy be imported for sale, shall forfeit the penalty of 5*l*. in respect of every pirated copy so imported, to be sued for and recovered by the said proprietor in manner hereinafter prescribed." [But see sect. 22. The stat. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 17, says 10*l*., and double the value of every copy so imported.]

"21. If any person shall deem himself aggrieved by any entry made under colour of this act in the said register, or by the insertion of any book in the said lists, it shall be lawful for any judge at chambers, on the application of the person so complaining, to issue a summons calling upon the person upon whose notice such book shall have been entered in the said register, or inserted in the said lists, as the case may be, to appear before such judge, at a time to be appointed in such summons, to shew cause why such entry in the said register should not be expunged or varied, or why such insertion in the said lists should not be expunged; and such judge shall, at the time so appointed, proceed to hear and determine upon the matter of such summons, and make an order therein in writing: provided always, that if such application relate to a wrongful first publication, of which any party has availed himself to obtain an entry in the said register of a spurious work, and it shall appear to such judge, with respect to such wrongful publication, if in a country to which the author or first publisher does not belong, and between which and this country no treaty of international copyright subsists, that the party making the application was the author or first publisher, as the case requires, or with respect to such wrongful first publication, either in the country where a rightful first publication has taken place, or between which and this country a treaty of international copyright does subsist, that a court of competent jurisdiction in any such country where such wrongful first publication has taken place has given judgment in favour of the right of the party claiming to be the author or first publisher, such judge shall make an order for expunging or varying the entry complained of, such order, in any of the foregoing cases, to be made with or without costs, as to such judge shall seem just; and upon service of such order, or a certified copy thereof, upon the said registrar, if the same shall relate to any entry in the said register, or upon the Commissioners of Customs, or their secretary for the time being, if the same shall relate to any insertion in the said lists, the said registrar shall expunge, vary, or confirm the said entry, or the said commissioners shall expunge such book from the said lists, or retain the same therein, according to the tenor of such order; and in case such book shall be expunged from such lists in pursuance of any such order, the prohibition imposed by this act in respect of the importation of such book shall thenceforth cease. If at the time appointed in any such summons the person so summoned shall not appear before such judge, then, upon proof by affidavit that such summons, or a true copy thereof, has been personally served or left at the last known or usual place of abode of the person so summoned, or transmitted by post to him at such last known place of abode, or, in case the person to whom such summons was directed, and his place of abode, cannot be found, that due diligence has been used to ascertain the same," [How if he be dead?] "such judge shall be at liberty to proceed ex parte to hear and determine the matter; but if either party be dissatisfied with such order, he may apply to the superior court of which such judge is a member to review such order, and make such further order thereon as such court may see fit; and the remedies provided by this section shall be applicable to any entry made in the register-book of Stationers' Hall, and of any insertion in any such lists publicly exposed by the Commissioners of Customs prior to the passing of this act.

"22. If any person, not being the proprietor of the copyright in any work of literature or art wherein such copyright shall be subsisting, shall, without the authority in writing of such proprietor, knowingly import, sell, publish, or expose, or have in his possession for sale or hire in any part of the British dominions, any pirated copy of such work, he shall forfeit the same, and also the sum of 5*s*. in respect of every such copy to the proprietor of the copyright; and every person who shall have in his possession the plate upon which any pirated copy of any print, chart, or map may be engraved, or any mould or die for the manufacture of pirated copies of any sculpture, model, or cast, shall forfeit the same to the said proprietor."

In sect. 20 we have a different provision against the importation of pirated copies of works notified to the Customs, namely, forfeiture of the pirated copies and 5*l*. per copy. At present the penalty is 10*l*. and double the value of each copy—and why not? Half of the penalty goes to the officers of Customs or Excise. Macaulay's History of England may be purchased, we are told, in Canada for 6*d*. and in the West Indies for 8*d*. per volume. It would be a small consolation to the victims of such a piracy to recover the spurious copies and 5*s*.

"23. Any person who shall represent or perform any dramatic piece or musical composition without the consent of the author or proprietor of the sole right of representing or performing the same, during the continuance of such right, shall forfeit to such author or proprietor the sum of 40*s*., or the full amount of the benefit or advantage arising from each such representation or performance, or the injury or loss sustained by such author or proprietor, for whichever he shall elect to proceed or sue, together with the costs of such proceeding or suit." [The existing law says "publicly perform," not meaning to interdict displays at private parties, &c.]

"24. If any person shall during the term of copyright in any lecture, without the leave of the author thereof or his assigns, by any means obtain or make a copy thereof, or print or publish the same in any public newspaper or otherwise, or shall sell or publicly expose any copy thereof for sale, knowing the same to have been obtained or printed or published without such leave as aforesaid, every person so offending shall forfeit to the author or his assigns every such pirated copy found in his possession, and 1*l*. for every sheet thereof."

The existing law (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 65, s. 1) says 1*d*. per sheet, and is confined to piracy of unpublished lectures. Under the bill the penalty for pirating a volume of poems is forfeiture of the copies and 5*s*. per copy; but if it is a volume of lectures, (including sermons?), it is 1*l*. per sheet.

"25. Any penalty or forfeiture imposed by this act, and given to the proprietor of the copyright in respect of which the same is incurred, except books absolutely forfeited under sect. 20, may be prosecuted or recovered by such proprietor before any justice of the peace or magistrate for the county or place in which the offence shall have been committed, or in which the offender shall reside, without prejudice to any right of action which the proprietor may or might otherwise have had for any damages consequent on this or any other infringement of his privilege of copyright; and any damages, which such proprietor may sustain from any infringement of his privilege of copyright, may be sued for by action at law, to be brought by him in any court having jurisdiction in that part of the British dominions in which the offence shall have been committed or the offender shall reside; and in every such proceeding, if it relate to the right of representation or performance of any dramatic piece or musical composition, it shall be sufficient for the plaintiff to state that he has the sole right, without stating that it is subject to any right which he could or may have given to any other person, not being the defendant, to represent or perform the same. In any such action as aforesaid the defendant, on pleading thereto, shall give to the plaintiff a notice in writing of any objection on which he means to rely on the trial thereof; and if he assert that the plaintiff is not the author or first publisher of such book, or the proprietor of the copyright therein, or that some other person was so, he shall specify in such notice the name of such other person, together with the title of the book, and the time and place of first publication thereof; otherwise he shall not, at the trial or hearing of such action, be allowed to give evidence that the plaintiff was not the author or first publisher of the book, or the proprietor of the copyright therein, or that any other person was so; nor shall any objection be allowed to be made or taken by or for the defendant which shall not have been stated in such notice. And if any action or suit shall be commenced or brought against any person for doing or causing to be done anything in pursuance of this act, the defendant in such action may plead the general issue, and give the special matter in evidence; and if upon such action a verdict shall be given for the defendant, or the plaintiff shall become nonsuited or discontinue his action, then the defendant shall have and recover his full costs, for which he shall have the same remedy as any defendant has by law in any other case. And all actions, suits, bills, indictments, or informations for any offence against this act shall be brought, sued, and commenced within twelve months next after such offence committed, or else the same shall be void; provided that such limitation of time shall not extend or be construed to extend to any actions, suits, or other proceedings which, under the authority of this act, shall or may be brought, sued, or commenced for or in respect of any copies of books to be delivered for the use of the British Museum, or of any one of the four libraries hereinbefore mentioned.

"26. The proprietor of the copyright in any work of literature or art shall not be entitled to the protection or benefit of any of the provisions of this act in respect of any such work as he is hereby permitted to register, unless he shall so register the same in the manner prescribed for that purpose, nor in respect of any such work which by this act is required to be delivered for the use of the British Museum and public libraries, unless he shall so deliver the same in manner prescribed by this act; nor shall the proprietor of any translation of any dramatic piece be entitled to such protection or benefit unless such translation be published within three months after the registration of the work of which it is a translation: provided always, that the omission to register any work of literature or art shall not affect the copyright therein of the proprietor thereof, nor shall such omission as to any dramatic piece prejudice the remedies which the proprietor of the right of representation thereof may have by virtue of this act."

This is more puzzling than "crowner's quest law." The proprietor of copyright shall not be entitled to the protection or benefit of any of the provisions of the act unless he register and deliver copies; yet, look you, the omission to register shall not affect his copyright! But what becomes of his copyright if he omits to deliver copies? Mass, we cannot tell. Neither can we tell whether or not, upon registration and delivery of copies, the title relates back to the time of publication. Let the publishers look to this; it is a blundering extension of a clause in the Foreign Copyright Act, (7 & 8 Vict. c. 12, s. 6).

"27. In case the Legislature or proper legislative authorities in any British possession shall make due provision for securing or protecting the rights of British authors in such possessions by any act or ordinance duly approved of by her Majesty for that purpose, her Majesty may, if she think fit, thereupon issue an Order in Council declaring that so long as the provisions of such act or ordinance continue in force within such possession, the prohibitions and provisions contained in this or any other act relating to or for the privilege of copyright shall be suspended so far as regards such possession, and thereupon such act or ordinance shall come into operation, except so far as may be otherwise provided therein, or as may be otherwise directed by such Order in Council: provided always, that no such act or ordinance shall be construed to authorise the importation into the United Kingdom of any pirated copies of any work wherein copyright may be subsisting in the United Kingdom, and if such pirated copies shall be brought into the United Kingdom they shall be forfeited and destroyed, or returned to the British possession from which they shall have been imported, as the Commissioners of Customs may direct."

This is the stat. 10 & 11 Vict. c. 95, which by some means was smuggled through the Legislature for the purpose of enabling American printers to rob English authors of the benefit of their copyright in the colonies; and it has fulfilled that purpose. Being objectionable, it is, of course, served up again, but with the same blunder as in dealing with the International Copyright Acts. The existing act is repealed absolutely, and re-enacted only prospectively, without any saving of existing ordinances of colonies and orders in council.

"28. To provide against the suppression of books of importance to the public, the Judicial Committee of her Majesty's Privy Council, on complaint made to them that the proprietor of the copyright in any book, after the death of its author, has refused to republish or to allow the republication thereof, whereby such book may be withheld from the public, may grant a license to such complainant to publish such book in such manner and subject to such conditions as they may think fit, and such complainant may publish such book accordingly.

"29. Nothing in this or any other act relating to copyright shall prevent the importation into the United Kingdom, for deposit in the library of the British Museum, of single copies of any books which may consist in part of matter in which any copyright may subsist in the British dominions, provided the same contain other and original matter.

"30. When her Majesty shall have issued any Order or Orders in Council under the authority of this act, her Majesty may from time to time revoke the whole or any part thereof by any further order; and in case such order of revocation shall apply to any books or prints, the same shall be chargeable, upon importation into the United Kingdom, with the duties payable on books or prints imported from any foreign country between which and this country no treaty of international copyright subsists."

The proper place for this, if nonsense can be properly placed anywhere, is after sect. 33.

"31. Every Order in Council issued under the authority of this act, or to give effect to any colonial act or ordinance relating to copyright duly approved by her Majesty, shall, within fourteen days after the issuing thereof, be twice published in the London Gazette.

"32. A copy of every Order in Council issued under the authority of this act and of every such act or ordinance, together with the Order in Council thereon, shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament within six weeks after issuing of such order, if Parliament be then sitting, and if not, then within six weeks after the commencement of the then next session of Parliament.

"33. Whenever a treaty shall have been concluded between her Majesty and any foreign country for the purpose of securing to the authors and publishers of the United Kingdom and of such country respectively a reciprocal protection in their rights of property in their literary productions, and her Majesty shall have, by virtue of the power vested in her, issued an Order in Council conferring privilege of copyright on the authors, inventors, designers, engravers, or makers of any books and prints published in such country, it shall be lawful for the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury to direct that such books and prints shall, upon their importation into the United Kingdom, be charged only with the duties set forth in the tariff acts in force for the time being as payable upon books and prints admitted under treaties of international copyright; and whenever it shall be a stipulation in any such treaty that the duties to be charged on such books and prints shall not be raised during the continuance of such convention, or that in case any reduction of those rates should be made, during such period, in favour of books and prints published in any other country, the books and prints of the country with which such treaty shall have been concluded shall also be subject only to such reduced duties on importation, such stipulations shall have the effect of law, and such books and prints shall be charged with duty on importation into the United Kingdom, according to the terms of such stipulations.

"34. This act shall extend to the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and to every part of the British dominions, including the islands of Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney, and Sark, and shall be registered in the royal courts of the Islands of Guernsey and Jersey respectively, and the said royal courts respectively shall have full power and authority and are hereby required to register the same.

"35. This act shall come into operation on the day of the passing of this act; and in citing it in other acts of Parliament and in legal instruments it shall be sufficient to use the expression "the Copyright Consolidation Act, 1857."

"36. 'Assigns' shall be construed to mean and include every person in whom the interest of the author in any copyright shall be vested, whether derived from such author before or after the publication of the work, either by sale, gift, bequest, operation of law, or otherwise:

'Author' shall, with reference to prints, sculptures, and other works of art, be deemed to include the engraver, designer, inventor, and maker thereof:

'Board of Trade' shall mean the Lords of the Committee of Privy Council for the consideration of all matters of trade and plantations:

Book' shall be construed to mean and include every volume, part or division of a volume, pamphlet, sheet of letter-press, sheet of music:

'Print' shall include prints taken by lithography, or any other mechanical process by which any objects or any prints or impressions of drawings or designs are capable of being represented or multiplied indefinitely:" [Why not photographs?]

'British dominions' shall mean and include the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and all colonies, settlements, and possessions of the Crown which now are or hereafter may be acquired:

'Copyright' shall be construed to mean the sole and exclusive liberty of printing or otherwise multiplying copies of any subject to which the said word is herein applied:

'Dramatic piece' shall be construed to mean and include every tragedy, comedy, play, opera, farce, or other scenic, musical, or dramatic entertainment:" [Polonius is still more particular.]

'First publication' shall include first representation, performance, or delivery of dramatic pieces, musical compositions, and lectures:

'Pirated copy' shall mean, with reference to any work of literature or art in which copyright subsists, any copy of such work printed or published or made without the written authority of the proprietor of such copyright; and with reference to any work of literature or art first published in any foreign country to which the privilege of copyright is extended, shall mean any copy thereof printed, published, or made without the sanction of the proprietor of the copyright therein, in any other country than that in which such work shall have been first published:"

What will France, Belgium, Prussia, &c. say to this? Are Galignani or Tauchnitz piracies and translations of foreign copyright works to be imported into and sold in this country without restraint, if they happen to be printed without sanction in the country of first publication? A French or German author sells his British copyright and the right of translation to a British publisher; may the author afterwards export his own copies to this country? A copy of part of a work is not a copy of the work, and is not prohibited as a pirated copy.

'Periodical work' shall mean and include any encyclopædia, review, magazine, or work published in a series of volumes, or in parts or numbers, or other periodical work:

'Registrar' shall mean the officer appointed by the Company of Stationers in London for registering copyright works:

'Universities and colleges' shall be understood to mean the two universities in England and the colleges or houses of learning within the same, the four universities in Scotland, and the colleges of Eton, Westminster, and Winchester."

BILL IN PROGRESS.

THE NEW OATHS BILL.

A Bill to amend the Act 1 & 2 Vict. c. 105, intituled "An Act for removing Doubts as to the Validity of certain Oaths."

Whereas in all cases in which the sanction of an oath is required, the oath ought, by the common law, to be administered in such manner as will render it most effective and binding on the conscience of the person to be sworn; but doubts have arisen whether such rule of the common law be applicable to cases in which a special form of abjuration or special words of asseveration are prescribed by statute; for the removal of such doubts, be it declared and enacted &c.

Sect. 1. That notwithstanding any statute or usage to the contrary, whenever any person to whom an oath is tendered shall object to its administration in the prescribed or accustomed form, or in the prescribed words of asseveration, and the same shall be administered to him in such form of words and with such solemnities as he shall declare to be binding on his conscience, the oath when so administered shall be deemed to have been lawfully administered and taken; and every person so taking the oath shall, if guilty of false swearing, be liable to conviction for perjury, and shall be subject to every other consequence and entitled to every benefit to which he would have been subject or entitled if the oath had been administered in the prescribed or accustomed form, and with the prescribed words of asseveration, and the prescribed or accustomed solemnities.

THE PRIVILEGE OF REPORTS.—The Select Committee of the House of Lords on the Privilege of Reports have agreed to the following resolutions:—1. That the prayer of certain petitioners, that there shall be entire immunity for the publication in newspapers of all that is spoken at all public meetings, if the report be faithful, thus depriving persons calumniated of all remedy, save against the speaker, cannot safely be granted. 2. That faithful reports of the proceedings of either House of Parliament, at which strangers have been permitted to be present, shall have the same privilege as is now granted to faithful reports of the proceedings of courts of justice. 3. That if an action shall be brought for an alleged libel, it shall be competent for the defendant, in addition to any other plea, to plead "that the alleged libel was part of the report of the proceedings of a public meeting lawfully assembled for a lawful purpose, and that the said report is a faithful report of the said proceedings at the said public meeting, and that the plaintiff has sustained no actual damage by the publication of the alleged libel;" and that on proof of this plea, the jury should be directed to find a verdict for the defendant. And 4. That a public meeting for this purpose shall be a meeting lawfully called by the sheriff of a county or other public functionary to petition the Queen or either House of Parliament, or a meeting for the election of members of Parliament, or a meeting of the town council of any city or borough, or a meeting held under the authority of an act of Parliament for imposing rates on, or regulating the local affairs of, any district.

CHITTY'S COLLECTION of STATUTES of PRACTICAL UTILITY. With Notes thereon. Intended as a Circuit and Court Companion. The Second Edition. Containing all the Statutes of Practical Utility in the Civil and Criminal Administration of Justice to the Present Time. By W. N. WELSBY and EDWARD BEAVAN, Esqrs., Barristers at Law.

⁂ In the debate on the proposed consolidation of the Statutes, on the 9th February, 1854, Lord Campbell said, "that the Statutes at Large extended to about fifty volumes folio, but all the Statutes which were usually required by lawyers for reference might be found in three octavo volumes compiled by his learned friend Mr. Welsby. When he (Lord Campbell) was upon the bench he always had this work by him, and no Statutes were ever referred to by the Bar which he could not find in it."

This important Work will be continued annually, by an Edition of the Statutes, arranged on a similar plan, with a full Index, being published shortly after the close of each Session. Edited by E. BEAVAN, Esq. Two Supplements, containing the Statutes of 1854 and 1855, are now ready, price 9s. 6d. each, sewed.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, AUGUST 8, 1857.

THE REPORT OF THE COMMON-LAW (JUDICIAL BUSINESS) COMMISSION.

OUR readers are no doubt aware, that several months ago a Commission issued from the Crown to several eminent members of the Legislature and of the Profession*, directing an inquiry "into the present arrangements for transacting the judicial business, civil and criminal, of the superior courts of common law in England and Wales, together with the times and places at which assizes are holden," and directing them to report "whether any changes can be made by which such business may be transacted with greater convenience and at a less expense; and also whether any reduction may be made in the present number of the judges without detriment to the public service."

The Report of the Commissioners has just been presented, and the suggestions contained in it are so important to the Profession generally, that, having had an opportunity of perusing it, we hasten to lay before our readers a sketch of its contents.

The first matter entered upon is the possibility of reducing the present number of the judges in the common-law courts at Westminster Hall; and although the members of the Profession have probably, in common with ourselves, a strong feeling against any such reduction, the subject has excited so much attention in various quarters, in the House of Commons especially, that the Commissioners have deemed it worthy of thorough investigation. An inquiry has therefore been instituted as to the amount of judicial business transacted prior to 1830, when the judges were but twelve in number—no doubt with a view to correct an erroneous impression common to many, that the additional judges appointed in 1830 were made in consequence only of the increase in the number of the circuits by the addition of Wales.

This inquiry is, however, productive of no very satisfactory results, owing to the vast change in the nature of the business transacted since that time, occasioned partly by the abolition of many formal and trifling matters which used to occupy the time of the Court, and partly by the introduction in modern acts of Parliament of entirely new business, considerably more intricate and important than any of that which has ceased to exist. The consequence of all this is, that although numerically the Cause Lists and Court Papers of the present day do not equal any of those of the five years prior to 1830, in matters of weight and difficulty they no doubt far exceed them.

* The original Commissioners, appointed by warrant under the sign-manual, dated the 3rd December, 1856, were, Lord Campbell, Lord Wensleydale, the late Baron Alderson, Mr. Justice Cresswell, Sir John Pakington, Mr. Stuart Wortley, Sir Frederick Thesiger, Mr. Wilson Patten, and Mr. Waddington. By subsequent warrants, Mr. Baron Martin succeeded Baron Alderson, and Viscount Eversley took the place of Sir Frederick Thesiger, who had previously resigned.

Mr. Stuart Wortley was prevented by illness from attending any but the preliminary meetings of the Commissioners, and his signature is not attached to the Report.

For greater satisfaction, however, on this point, another comparison has been made between the amount of business transacted in 1856 and the average yearly amount of a period embracing the twelve years ending and including 1856. The result of this, taking into account the increased length of trials at Nisi Prius since the recent admission of parties as witnesses, and the permission afforded to counsel of making additional addresses to the jury, is, in the opinion of the Commissioners, evidence of the existence of an increased rather than of a diminished amount of judicial labour; and the examination of Mr. Justice Coleridge and Mr. Baron Bramwell, whose opinions on this point are published in the Appendix, fully confirms their view of the case.

A very important item, in considering the desirability of having twelve instead of fifteen judges, relates to the necessary attendance in such case of three instead of four members of each court upon the Banc sittings. The present attendance of four judges is, perhaps, open to the objection, that in cases where a difference of opinion arises there may by possibility be an equal division. Such an event is, however, declared by one or two witnesses examined to be of extremely rare occurrence, and the evil, if it exists, is far outweighed by the advantage of having at all other times either the unanimous opinion of four judges, or else the opinion of three against one—more satisfactory a great deal to the suitor than the opinions of a bare majority.

A still more important argument against the reduction of the existing judicial staff, and one which seems to us to have weighed much with the Commissioners, is, that as at the present time, owing to unavoidable causes, very frequently three judges only are able to sit together in Banc, so if the normal number were reduced to three, the like causes would as frequently reduce the attendance to two, and very much inconvenience would be occasioned.

The unanimous opinion of the Commissioners is, that the present number of fifteen judges ought to be retained; and we feel sure that both the Profession and the public generally will concur in their recommendation.

No less than nine towns, of greater or less importance, sent in memorials, praying either for separate assizes or for an extension of their present assize jurisdiction.

The first of these claims taken into consideration in the Report is that of the city of Manchester and hundred of Salford, the enormous increase in the commerce of which during the past few years has rendered it a matter of the greatest inconvenience that all the causes and criminal business arising in these two places should be sent for trial to Liverpool, distant nearly thirty miles.

Nineteen memorials were presented to the Commissioners from various parts of the county palatine, praying for a separate assize at Manchester, and such prayer was advocated by a deputation which attended the Commission in February last, and who stated, amongst other things, that the corporation of Manchester was prepared to expend, if necessary, 50,000*l.* in the erection of the necessary courts, judges' lodgings, and other accommodation. This statement, being supported by an elaborate calculation of the immense additional cost of civil actions arising in Manchester, and tried thirty miles off, has called forth a unanimous recommendation that a separate criminal and civil assize shall be holden at Manchester for that city and the hundred of Salford.

The corporation of Lancaster also made an application for a large extension of their present assize jurisdiction; but the arguments by which it was supported were so slender as to be declared wholly insufficient to warrant the adoption of any such important measure, and the prayer of the memorialists is, therefore, unanimously rejected.

A much stronger case, as it appears to us, was made out by the representatives of the West Riding of the county of York for the removal of their assizes from York; but there are unfortunately two rival towns, Leeds and Wakefield, both equally desirous of obtaining the West Riding assizes, and they, both in their memorials and by their deputations, put forth arguments against one another's claim, and furnished the deputation from York with several very good suggestions (which the representatives of that ancient city appear to have been by no means slow to take advantage of) for retaining the assizes for the whole county at the place where they are now holden. The Commissioners are unanimous against the claim of Leeds, but as to Wakefield they differ, Sir John Pakington and Mr. Wilson Patten thinking assizes ought to be holden there, and the rest of the Commissioners believing them to be unnecessary.

Birmingham has made a very strong claim for a separate assize, grounding the application upon a statement, that not only is Birmingham the centre of a vast mining and manufacturing district situate on the borders of Warwick and Staffordshire, and connected by railroads with all parts of those two counties, but also that the inhabitants of that densely-populated town equal in number half the population of the entire county, while nearly one-third of the civil and criminal business tried at Warwick arises in Birmingham.

Upon this statement two claims are put forth—one, that Birmingham may be made the centre of an assize district, to be hereafter defined by law, and to include the whole of the county of Warwick and the mining and manufacturing districts of South Staffordshire; the other, (if the first is rejected), that, without abolishing the present Warwick assizes, additional ones may be held at Birmingham for the borough alone.

The former of these propositions is unanimously rejected by the Commissioners; but as to the propriety of the latter, so much difference of opinion exists that the numbers are equally divided, four voting in favour of and four against any change at all in the county assizes. The Birmingham memorial, therefore, goes before the Queen in by no means an unfavourable manner, and we shall not be greatly surprised if the more moderate of the two prayers is eventually granted.

Memorials and a deputation from Bristol complain of the inconvenience arising from all the criminal business of the city being tried, forty miles away, at Gloucester, and of the injustice done to prisoners, who are seldom able to raise funds sufficient to bring any witnesses that distance. It is, in addition, alleged as a grievance, that, owing to there being only one civil assize in the year holden at Bristol, in local actions, such as ejectment, the party entitled is delayed nearly a year before he can get a judgment.

Although this latter statement is undoubtedly erroneous, with the existing provisions of the Common-law Procedure Act for changing the venue, all the Commissioners, except Mr. Justice Cresswell, think that a second civil assize ought to be holden at Bristol; but as to making any arrangements for transacting criminal business there, they are again equally divided in opinion.

The remaining memorials for additional assizes, presented by the corporations of Kendal, Hull, and Wisbech respectively, being unsupported by any documentary or other evidence, have been unanimously rejected.

The recommendations made respecting remodelling the circuits are sufficiently important to require the best attention of the Profession generally. Our space will only permit us to make a bare statement of the proposed alterations.

After referring to the Report of the Circuit Regulation Commission of 1845, and expressing their entire concurrence in the opinion therein contained touching the undue length of the Northern Circuit, and which will shortly be still further increased if the recommendation as to Manchester be adopted, the Commissioners suggest that York shall be taken from the Northern Circuit and added to the Midland; that Warwick shall be added to the Oxford, and Northampton to the Norfolk Circuit; and that Salop and Hereford, now forming part of the Oxford, shall for the future be included in the Welsh Circuits.

By this arrangement it is estimated that the respective length of the circuits affected will be as follows:—

North and South Wales	36 days.
Northern (without York)	36 „
Oxford (without Salop and Hereford, and with Warwick)	31 „
Midland (without Warwick and Northampton, with York)	35 „
Norfolk (with Northampton)	28 „

The amalgamation of the Welsh counties appears to have engaged a large amount of attention, and the opinion of the Commissioners on the subject is not expressed in so confident a manner as might have been anticipated.

The suggestion made by the majority is, that upon the North Wales Circuit, Ruthin and Mold shall be the alternate assize towns for the counties of Denbigh and Flint, and Bangor or Carnarvon for Carnarvon and Anglesey. Respecting Montgomery and Merioneth they offer no advice, owing to the incomplete state of several proposed railways through those counties.

Upon the South Wales Circuit it is suggested that two judges shall for the future go to Cardiff and Swansea, and together transact the large and increasing business of Glamorganshire; that Cardigan and Carmarthen shall be alternately the assize towns for the counties in which they are situate; that Haverfordwest shall remain the assize town for Pembroke; and that at Brecon shall be tried the business arising in Brecknock and Radnor.

We sincerely hope that these recommendations will be carried into effect. The avowed difficulty met with by the Commissioners of 1829, in attempting to unite the counties of the principality, arose out of the strong local feeling manifested against any such amalgamation. With great respect for the views others may even at the present time entertain upon the subject, we cannot help expressing our belief that the days have long gone by when local prejudice, however strong, is to stand in the way of public convenience and advantage.

No alteration whatever is proposed in the present arrangement of the terms, or times of holding the circuits. Winter commissions are recommended to be issued as at present to those towns in which the number of criminals awaiting trial renders such increased accommodation necessary, accompanied by commissions of assize and Nisi Prius, for the disposal of civil business, in Yorkshire and Lancashire, and such other places as may from time to time clearly require such assistance. Several suggestions were submitted to the Commissioners, and are mentioned in the Report, for a more equal division of the year by two general circuits; but the only feasible way of effecting this was by having one circuit in January and another in July, which would place the general assizes of the kingdom in the depth of winter, and render the number of prisoners for trial in July nearly double of that now appearing in the calendars of the Summer Circuit. The periods of the circuits, therefore, remaining unaltered, no useful change in the terms can, in the opinion of the Commissioners, be effected.

The prohibition of pleading between the 10th August and the 24th October by the stat. 2 Will. 4, c. 39, is considered so undesirable, that there is a recommendation for a new act of Parliament, in which the 1st October shall be substituted for the 24th; and it is suggested that the vacation judge may be empowered to try actions of lesser importance in all the courts during the month of October, and so not only afford to parties an earlier opportunity of having their causes tried, but relieve the Courts of much of the pressure of Michaelmas Term.

We must own we have considerable doubt as to much good being likely to result from this recommendation. All the members of the Profession examined preserve a dubious silence upon the point; and the ordinary absence from London during October of the more eminent members of the Bar will, we imagine, limit the benefit to be derived from any such change to very trifling matters of litigation.

An alteration likely to do away with much inconvenience has been recommended with reference to the sittings at Nisi Prius, and the attendance of the judges at chambers during term.

Every one conversant with the common-law courts is aware what great annoyance is continually caused to all parties concerned by the presiding judge being obliged, at two or half-past two o'clock in the afternoon, to adjourn the Court in order to attend chambers. To avoid this inconvenience, two equally objectionable methods have hitherto been resorted to—one, to request a brother judge, sitting in Banc, (and who is usually taken away from still more important business), to attend chambers; the other, to keep some 100 or 150 attornies and clerks waiting elsewhere until the conclusion of the cause he is trying.

The Commissioners suggest that this evil may for the future be remedied by one judge only attending chambers at a much earlier hour in the day, and transacting the business of all the courts; the other two "outsitting" judges to sit at Nisi Prius, and try indiscriminately all causes entered during the sittings.

Such, and such only, are the recommendations made by the "Common-law (Judicial Business) Commissioners." Considering the magnitude of the inquiry upon which they have been engaged, the shortness of the period (scarcely eight months) devoted to their investigations, and the immense amount of information collected together in the bulky Appendix to their Report, we think that the Profession and the public at large are very much indebted to them for the patience and assiduity with which the inquiry has been conducted. Every one of their recommendations is of unquestionable importance, and beneficial results must follow the adoption of nearly all of them. In this, as in every other effort at legal reform, we have no doubt that numerous obstacles started up during the progress of the inquiry, and invested many desirable alterations with difficulties before uncontemplated. Upon this subject we cannot do better than quote the peroration of the Report itself:—

"We have all felt strongly, that before recommending changes of importance in the mode of administering justice, it became us to satisfy ourselves clearly, by arguments leaving no doubt or hesitation in our minds, that such changes were called for by the wants of the public, and were for the general advantage and welfare of the nation.. By some of the alterations which we have proposed, more labour will undoubtedly be imposed upon the judges; by others, the interests of some members of the Bar may possibly be for a time affected. With regard to the first of these considerations, we are confident that the additional exertions required from the Bench will be willingly and cheerfully made; and with regard to the second, however much we should regret such a consequence of a partial re-arrangement of the circuits, we cannot allow it to deter us from laying before your Majesty, in obedience to your Majesty's commands, our unanimous resolution upon that subject. We have only to add, that upon this as upon all other branches of our inquiry, our great study has been to ascertain to the best of our ability in what mode the object required for the public benefit could be attained with the smallest sacrifice of private interest and convenience."

From the statements made in Parliament, in pulpits, and in the Quarterly Review, it might be supposed that the Divorce Bill threatened a complete change in the status of husband and wife, and in the social habits of the people of this country. So far, however, is this from being the case that its provisions substantially embody that which has been the practice with regard to divorce in England during the last 170 years, and the main alteration will consist in reducing the expense attending the dissolution of the marriage tie, and in effecting such dissolution through a court of law, instead of by a special act of Parliament. Thus, since the case of Lord Roos in 1669, it has been the practice of Parliament to grant a divorce on the prayer of the husband for the adultery of his wife; and since the case of Mrs. Addison in 1801, to grant it at the suit of the wife for what may be termed aggravated adultery on the part of the husband. It is true that applications by wives for this relief have been very few—Mr. Macqueen sums them up as five in number*; but whenever they have been made, and it has been shewn that the husband has been guilty of incestuous adultery, or of adultery with bigamy, or the like, relief has been granted.

Again: in all these cases the parties have been allowed to marry again; and although a standing order of the House of Lords in 1809 required that a clause should be inserted in every divorce bill to the effect that the person whose marriage is dissolved shall not intermarry with the adulterer or adulteress, yet this clause has been invariably struck out in committee. It has not been retained, says Mr. Macqueen, "because all the feelings of humanity, and all the dictates of policy, suggest that the guilty parties ought not to be debarred from making amends to social order by entering into matrimony. To prevent marriage in such a case would be but to prolong the unseemly spectacle of adultery, and to inflict bastardy on the innocent and helpless offspring†." Putting aside that part of the bill which relates to procedure, it will be found merely to give the form of law to pre-existing and firmly-established practice on the subject. The bill permits of divorce à vinculo only in case of adultery on the part of the wife, and incestuous adultery, or adultery coupled with incest, or with cruelty, or with wilful desertion, on the part of the husband; it does not prohibit the parties from marrying again, or the adulterer and adulteress from intermarrying. Even now we fall short of the liberty granted to misyoked humanity in all foreign Protestant countries. In Scotland, wilful desertion for four years, followed by a judicial requisition of conjugal rights on the part of the complainant, warrants a divorce.

The provisions of the bill at length will be found ante, p. 219.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, AUGUST 15, 1857.

Three years after Tribonian had received the command of the Emperor Justinian to commence the great undertaking of digesting the Roman laws, then scattered over upwards of two thousand treatises, and containing, it is said, three millions of lines, that illustrious jurist and his colleagues had completed their arduous task, and the Pandects or Digest—that immense collection of written reason which still forms the basis of European law—sprang into existence, a lasting monument of their untiring industry and their profound and scientific knowledge of jurisprudence. Thirteen centuries later in the history of the world the wealthy and highly-civilised country of Great Britain began to find the inconvenience of the vast accumulation of the acts of her Legislature—many obsolete, many repealed or partially repealed, but filling, in no slight confusion, upwards of forty ponderous volumes.

This attracted the attention of the Lord High Chancellor, Lord Cranworth, who in the year 1853, associating with himself in the task of consolidating the statutes Mr. Bellenden Ker and other colleagues as commissioners, promised to the country at no distant period the blessings of a Victorian code. As yet, however, not a single consolidated statute resulting from the promise has received the sanction of the Legislature. Let us endeavour to account for this delay—this failure in carrying out a most useful project—and we may afterwards make some suggestions which, in our opinion, may yet lead to its success.

The mode in which the commissioners were brought together in the commission will be best shewn by the language of Lord Cranworth himself. "In order," said his Lordship, addressing the House of Lords, "that he might accomplish the object of consolidating the statute law, the course which he had chalked out for himself had been to apply in the first instance to Mr. Bellenden Ker, who was, at least for all practical purposes, the only surviving member of the commission which had been appointed by Lord Brougham to effect a consolidation of both the statute and the criminal law. That commission had proceeded with the criminal, but not with the statute, law, and they had made one report on the subject. He had a conference with Mr. Ker, and it appeared to him (the Lord Chancellor) that the best step that could be taken was to induce that gentleman to continue his services as a commissioner for the consolidation of the statute law, while he should have to assist him, in the discharge of his duties, four such gentlemen as might appear to be best qualified for the task." (Hansard, vol. 129, 3rd series, 1811.

With reference to the cost of the undertaking, and to the engagement of Mr. Bellenden Ker's duly qualified assistants, his Lordship upon another occasion, addressing the same audience, says, "The expense would be extremely small; and he believed he had secured the services of four of the best gentlemen he could hear of. . . . . He had secured their services, at the expense of a very few hundred pounds for each of them, for a year. He should expect that they should devote their whole time to the work." (Hansard, vol. 125, 3rd series, 294, 295).

The four gentlemen alluded to, whose valuable services were secured to the country at so cheap a rate, were Mr. Coode, Mr. Chisholm Anstey, Mr. J. Warrington Rogers, and Mr. Brickdale.

The history of this commission is short; it existed for one year; the four assistant commissioners drew bills which have never become acts; and Mr. Bellenden Ker, as might à priori have been expected from his long connexion with the former commission, produced Reports, printed by order of Parliament and at the expense of the country.

The next step seems to have been to dispense with the services of three of the commissioners, one of whom was relegated as Attorney-General to Tasmania; another in the same capacity to Hong Kong; while the other seems to have subsided into private life. If these gentlemen were well qualified for their task, it is to be regretted that the country has lost the benefit of the experience they must have gained during their tenure of office. If they were not well qualified, it does little credit to the discernment of Lord Cranworth that three out of the four assistant commissioners should have disappointed his expectations. Out of the debris of the first commission emerged Mr. Bellenden Ker and Mr. Brickdale, and a new commission was issued on the 15th December, 1854, to the Lord Chancellor, (Lord Cranworth), Lords Lyndhurst, Brougham, Wrottesley, and Campbell, C. J., Sir J. Jervis, C. J., Sir F. Pollock, C. B., Sir J. Parke, B., the Lord Advocate, (James Moncreif), Messrs. Walpole and Napier, Sir W. Page Wood, V. C., the Attorney-General, (Sir A. J. E. Cockburn), the Solicitor-General, (Sir R. Bethell), the Attorney-General of Ireland, (A. Brewster), the Solicitor-General of Ireland, (W. Keogh), the Solicitor-General of Scotland, (James Crawford), Mr. Coulson, and Mr. Bellenden Ker. To these names have been added, by a subsequent commission, those of another Solicitor-General of Scotland, (Mr. Maitland), Mr. Matthew Talbot Baines, and Sir Fitzroy Kelly. Of this commission Mr. Bellenden Ker was the only paid commissioner, and Mr. Brickdale was the paid secretary.

The mode in which the commission appears now to proceed upon its task is by enlisting in its service some twenty gentlemen to consolidate different branches of the statute law, at a rate of remuneration corresponding apparently with the very economical views of the Lord Chancellor when he selected the members of the first commission.

We consider the constitution of the last two commissions to be radically bad. No one who sees the names which precede that of Mr. Bellenden Ker but must be aware that the advanced age of some, and the already almost overpowering official duties of others, entirely preclude their taking any serious part in the laborious task of the consolidation of our statute law. The connexion, however, of their names with the commission has this effect—it diminishes the responsibility of the paid commissioner; and if any credit is due to the gentlemen who really consolidate the statutes, it will be divided with, or rather it will be engrossed by, those who lend their names, if not their services, to the commission.

Again: if any independent member in Parliament should complain that the commission does not fulfil the expectations of the country, and is in fact doing little or nothing, those illustrious individuals with whose names it is ornamented, whatever may be their own private feelings upon the subject, can scarcely throw blame upon the commission of which they are a part, and may even be tempted to describe in glowing colours the benefits conferred upon the country by the employment of the paid commissioner, Mr. Bellenden Ker.

One reason why so little progress has been made in so considerable a time appears to be this, that really no definite or fixed plan of consolidation has been adopted. This was strongly insisted upon by more than one eminent member of the commission, but their advice seems to have been disregarded; every thing seems to have been merely tentative, with the vague hope that eventually some scheme might turn up—that the commissioners, destitute of any compass, might perchance, some time or other, drift in the right direction.

The consolidation of the statute law of this country is doubtless a great work, and, if well done, would confer inestimable benefits upon the country. It should, therefore, be undertaken with a corresponding spirit; it should be entrusted to men of the highest ability, of tried industry, and in whom the country and the Legislature would place implicit confidence. The real workmen should bear the responsibility, and solely receive the honour which they would deservedly win by the completion of a great undertaking: it should not be shared by those who give their countenance, but not their assistance. To get the services of such men they should be paid liberally, and this in the end would be found true economy. It is discreditable to a great and wealthy country, while spending upwards of 3,000,000*l.* for the palace in which their Parliament legislates, to refuse a sum sufficient adequately to remunerate those men who would reduce to order the chaotic legislation of upwards of six hundred years. If this course had been adopted four years ago, the work by this time might have been done; but if we go on retaining the services of paid commissioners merely because they belonged to a commission which ended only in a report, or secure the services of duly qualified assistants "at the expense of a few hundred pounds each of them for a year," our statutes will accumulate, our statute-book will increase in bulk, but the consolidation of the statutes will be no more advanced than it is now; that is to say, it will be in the same position as it was when the first commission was issued. What have these commissioners done? Their labours commenced in April, 1853; since that time more than four years have rolled away, (upwards of a year longer than sufficed to produce the Pandects), but our modern Tribonian cannot point to a single act produced by Mr. Ker or the commissions. They have, it is true, this year laid before Parliament some six bills upon one branch of the statute law, inclusive of one intituled "An Act to consolidate the Statute Law of England relating to Deer, Game, and Rabbits." "Parturiunt montes nascetur," &c.; but for this event it is to be feared that we must wait until some future session.

Mr. Baron Bramwell was examined before the commissioners appointed to inquire into the arrangements for transacting judicial business, and his Lordship's account of the heavy labours pertaining to his office affords a conclusive answer to any suggestions for reducing the number of our judges. Amidst his other duties, the learned judge holds that of reading reports to be a very important one. "Lord Wensleydale," he says, "told me, and my own judgment goes with it, that no judge can do his duty who does not read the reports . . . . When I was at the Bar I did not read them[*]; and I did not pretend to read them, and my clients knew that I did not read them, and they took me for better for worse, with notice. But I cannot serve the public in that way, and I read them now diligently and faithfully, and they require time. I do not mean to say that the reading of them is laborious, because, from long habit and inclination, I do not say but that the reading of the reports occasionally is rather an amusing thing." To the question, "Do you read all the multifarious reports, namely, the Jurist, the Law Journal, the Justice of the Peace, and the Law Times?" the learned judge answered, "No; I read what I suppose you may call the orthodox reports of the three common-law courts, namely, Ellis & Blackburn, the Common Bench Reports, and Hurlston & Norman. I read the Law Journal Reports, equity and common law, and I read the Jurist Reports. . . . . It may be asked why does one read the same thing in duplicate? My answer to that is, that if I distinctly comprehend the case when I read it, I do not trouble myself to read it again; but it very frequently happens that you find varieties of expression in the judgments, where they have not been considered and written, of such a character that it is quite desirable that you should read both reports. You may find that one reporter is struck by one remark, which he puts down, and while writing it, not being an accomplished short-hand writer, something escapes his attention, which the other puts down."

We are pleased to learn that one, who can give so good a reason for the existence of "heterodox" reports, devotes a portion of his valuable time to a perusal of those which appear in the pages of The Jurist.

PUBLIC EXAMINATION OF STUDENTS.

Michaelmas Term, 1857.

The Council of Legal Education have approved of the following rules for the public examination of the students.

The attention of the students is requested to the following rules of the Inns of Court:—

"As an inducement to students to propose themselves for examination, studentships shall be founded of fifty guineas per annum each, to continue for a period of three years, and one such studentship shall be conferred on the most distinguished student at each public examination; and further, the examiners shall select and certify the names of three other students who shall have passed the next best examinations, and the Inns of Court to which such students belong may, if desired, dispense with any terms, not exceeding two, that may remain to be kept by such students previously to their being called to the Bar. Provided that the examiners shall not be obliged to confer or grant any studentship or certificate unless they shall be of opinion that the examination of the students they select has been such as entitles them thereto."

"At every call to the Bar those students who have passed a public examination, and either obtained a studentship or a certificate of honour, shall take rank in seniority over all other students who shall be called on the same day."

"No student shall be eligible to be called to the Bar who shall not either have attended during one whole year the lectures of two of the Readers, or have satisfactorily passed a public examination."

Rules for the Public Examination of Candidates for Honours, or Certificates entitling Students to be called to the Bar.

An examination will be held in next Michaelmas Term, to which a student of any of the Inns of Court, who is desirous of becoming a candidate for a studentship or honours, or of obtaining a certificate of fitness for being called to the Bar, will be admissible.

Each student proposing to submit himself for examination will be required to enter his name at the treasurer's office of the Inn of Court to which he belongs on or before Thursday, the 22nd day of October next; and he will further be required to state in writing whether his object in offering himself for examination is to compete for a studentship or other honourable distinction, or whether he is merely desirous of obtaining a certificate preliminary to a call to the Bar.

The examination will commence on Thursday, the 29th day of October next, and will be continued on the Friday and Saturday following.

It will take place in the Benchers' Reading-room of Lincoln's-inn; and the doors will be closed ten minutes after the time appointed for the commencement of the examination.

The examination by printed questions will be conducted in the following order:—

Thursday morning, the 29th October, at half-past nine, on Constitutional Law and Legal History; in the afternoon, at half-past one, on Equity.

Friday morning, the 30th October, at half-past nine, on Common Law; in the afternoon, at half-past one, on the Law of Real Property, &c.

Saturday morning, the 31st October, at half-past nine, on Jurisprudence and the Civil Law; in the afternoon, at half-past one, a paper will be given to the students including questions bearing upon all the foregoing subjects of examination.

The oral examination will be conducted in the same order, during the same hours, and on the same subjects, as those already marked out for the examination by printed questions, except that on Saturday afternoon there will be no oral examination.

The oral examination of each student will be conducted apart from the other students; and the character of that examination will vary, according as the student is a candidate for honours or a studentship, or desires simply to obtain a certificate.

The oral examination and printed questions will be founded on the books below mentioned, regard being had, however, to the particular object with a view to which the student presents himself for examination.

In determining the question, whether a student has passed the examination in such a manner as to entitle him to be called to the Bar, the examiners will principally have regard to the general knowledge of law and jurisprudence which he has displayed.

A student may present himself at any number of examinations, until he shall have obtained a certificate.

Any student who shall obtain a certificate may present himself a second time for examination as a candidate for the studentship, but only at one of the three examinations immediately succeeding that at which he shall have obtained such certificate; provided, that if any student so presenting himself shall not succeed in obtaining the studentship, his name shall not appear in the list.

[*] His Lordship doubtless refers to the time when he was one of the leaders of the Bar in full practice. At that prosperous period of a lawyer's career the demands upon his time and attention are so incessant that he finds it very difficult to read reports systematically; but then he is constantly in the midst of the arguments, trials, and judgments which are reported, is personally engaged in the more important, and is daily hearing of moot and decided points. Let no one, who has not attained to so distinguished a position at the Bar, think that he can dispense with a careful study and noting of reports.

Students who have kept more than eleven terms shall not be admitted to an examination for the studentship.

The Reader on Constitutional Law and Legal History proposes to examine on the following subjects:—

He will expect the candidates for honours in the ensuing examination to possess a general knowledge of the leading events of English History.

He will expect them to be acquainted with the History of the Law of Real Property as given in Lord St. Leonards' Preface to Gilbert on Uses, and the Law of Treason and the Law relating to the Press, and with the most important State Trials during the time that has been mentioned.

The candidates for a pass will be required to answer general questions in English History, and to be well acquainted with the History of the Reigns of Elizabeth, Charles I, and Charles II, with the Events of the Revolution, and with the Reign of Anne.

HEARSAY EVIDENCE IN SCOTLAND.

Although hearsay evidence of almost every description was admitted on the trial of Madeleine Smith, the pocket-book of the deceased was, after objection and argument, rejected by a majority of the learned judges who presided on that occasion. It is somewhat difficult to appreciate the principle upon which the distinction rests, but it will be seen that the judges opposed to its admission proceed upon reasoning which does not apply to hearsay transmitted through a living witness. We give the arguments and judgments upon this point as we find them in the report of the trial by Mr. Morison, advocate:—

"The Lord Advocate then proposed to give in the deceased's pocket-book, and to have the entries in it read. The Court had decided, when he offered it before, that then a sufficient foundation had not been laid; but he thought that objection could not be made now. The handwriting of the entries was proved to have been L'Angelier's, and various circumstances had been proved, in the course of the evidence already adduced, to have occurred on the very days under date of which they were entered in this book. He therefore submitted that these entries were statements by himself of what he did on these days, and that the pocket-book should be received.

"Mr. Young argued that the book was irregularly kept; that the entry of the occurrence on the 22nd had been proved by the several witnesses to be inaccurate; and that though some of the matters entered under dates did occur under those dates, there was no guarantie that they were all so. Instead of being a memorandum-book regularly kept, the entries were the exceptions. So far as he had been able to discover, there was no case in which such a book had been received in evidence of facts mentioned in it. He submitted that the present was not a case of the kind in which this Court should begin the admission of such evidence.

"The Solicitor-General said that he knew of no principle in the law of evidence which excluded a document written by a deceased person from being used as evidence in such a case, and contended that it was good secondary evidence. It was a statement by L'Angelier that a certain circumstance happened on a certain day. Their Lordships would not have excluded the evidence had it been deponed to by a third party who had heard the deceased make the statement; and though he could not give a precedent precisely similar, he thought the whole principle of secondary evidence was in favour of its admissibility.

"The Dean of Faculty was also heard on the point. He contended that no precedent could be shewn in which the ordinary pocket memorandum of a deceased person had been used for the purposes sought in this case. There was no evidence to prove that the dates were correctly entered; and in fact the book did not profess to be a regular diary. The journal was begun in 1857; the deceased lived eighty or eighty-one days in that year, and the number of entries was only twenty-six, and for upwards of a week prior to his death it had ceased to be his journal at all. Besides, even amongst these few entries there were instances to prove the loose and careless manner in which they were sometimes made. The Solicitor-General had said that it was good secondary or hearsay evidence; but it appeared to him the present was an attempt to apply secondary evidence in a manner hitherto unknown. He had always understood that the principle by which secondary evidence was admitted was subject to this proviso—that a statement made for one purpose could not be received for another—that a statement made by a party, even on oath, upon one subject was not receivable for another purpose. To shew further the incorrectness of the entries, the Dean referred to one under date the 5th of March—'Saw Mimi; gave her a note, and received one;' which was contradicted by letter 119, which had been put in evidence on the ground that the prisoner's letter of the 5th of March was an answer to it; whereas, according to the entry, they were exchanged one for another.

"THE LORD JUSTICE CLERK, after alluding to the great importance of the matter, said—The admission of hearsay evidence is an established rule in the law of Scotland, but under restrictions and conditions which go in many instances to the entire rejection of the evidence. What is now to be proposed is this—to produce for the consideration of the jury certain memoranda or jottings made by the deceased, in which certain things are said to have been done, which go directly to the vital part of this charge. The Dean has felt that so strongly that he did not scruple to state what was the purport of one of the entries; but we must take care that the rules of evidence are not relaxed merely because it appears that the matter is of the highest importance in the case. Before evidence can be received and allowed to go to the jury, it must be evidence competent to be tendered. It will not do to take a half view of the case, and think it material that such a thing should go to the jury as evidence if it is not legally admissible against the prisoner. That is the rule also in civil cases. It is of importance, then, in considering whether the evidence is admissible—indeed I should say it was vitally important—to consider and ascertain in what circumstances, if possible from what motive, and at what period of the transactions going on at this time, these entries were made. Now, it is a most remarkable fact that there is no entry regarding the prisoner, or circumstances connected with the prisoner, before the 11th February; while the purpose on her part of breaking off this engagement, and of demanding the letters, had been communicated to the deceased, and his purpose and resolution not to give up the letters, and to keep her to the engagement, appeared to have been made known on the 13th; and his purpose in writing these entries obviously was to endeavour to strengthen his hold upon the prisoner, not only by refusing to give up the letters at that time, but afterwards to object to their interviews and communications, so as to endeavour to effect his object in preventing the marriage, and to entice her into giving up the engagement at once. I make this observation not merely with reference to the weight and credibility of those entries, but with reference to their admissibility. In the case of hearsay evidence we can ascertain from the witness a statement of all the circumstances, and all the motives connected with the statement being made by the deceased. What staggered me a good deal was—I put it to my mind thus:—Supposing an entry is found in a diary, 'I met A. B., and arranged to meet A. B. at such a place to-morrow night,' and at that place he was found murdered. It might be admissible against the panel charged with murder, that the statement was of a kind to be left to the jury to say whether his being murdered at this particular place was not the result of that appointment. I was a good deal affected, too—although I own the law is generally very strong on this point—by what the Lord Advocate so forcibly stated. Supposing that in this book there was found an entry that this man had purchased arsenic, would that not have been available in favour of the prisoner? I think there is an objection, without giving a different opinion on the point, which may arise, and that is, it may be also evidence against the deceased. One illustration was suggested to my mind by a person whose authority and experience are higher than any of our own. Take an action of divorce against the wife where the paramour was dead, and an entry is found in any diary of his that he had enjoyed the embraces of this woman in her husband's absence—could this diary be produced against the wife? I say no. What we are asked here to do is a thing altogether without example or precedent. No traces or indication of such a proceeding are to be found in any book, that a memorandum made by the deceased shall be proof against the panel in a charge of murder. I am unable to admit such evidence. One cannot tell how many documents may exist, and be found in the repositories of the deceased. I have a dim recollection of a case in 1808, the trial of a man of the name of Patch for murdering a man named Page, and in which a letter of the murdered man, prior to his death, was produced, but I have not found that it was allowed to be admitted. The point is perfectly new, and I am certainly of opinion that it should not be admitted.

"Lord HANDYSIDE said—We are asked to receive, as evidence for the Crown, a pocket-book containing an almanack and diary for 1857, in which certain entries are made opposite to certain days of the week from the 11th of February to the 14th of March. I mention these extreme dates, first, because they include the period of the whole of the entries in the diary—the entries not beginning with the commencement of the year; and, secondly, because the period during which the entries were made has reference only to the first and second charges in the indictment. The third charge is subsequent to the entries ceasing to be made. The special point is, whether the entries of certain dates—two in number—are to be read to make evidence for the prosecution as regards the first and second charges in the indictment. The whole of the entries have been written with a lead pencil. I notice this to make the observation that ink and penmanship afford to a certain degree the means of ascertaining whether the entries were made at the time opposite to which they are written. When all the entries are in pencil there can be no clue as to the time when the entries are in point of fact made, or that the original entries have not been expunged, and others substituted in their place, whether this be in correction of memory or with the purpose and design of imposition. But waiving this peculiarity in the present case, the point to be determined is, whether the entries of a deceased person set forth as having occurred at particular dates, and connected with the name of an individual, are admissible as evidence to support a criminal charge. So far as my knowledge goes, this is a new point. We have received no assistance from the Bar by reference to any authority; no case has been stated to us bearing upon the subject; and having taken some pains myself to search for authority and precedent, I have been unsuccessful in finding either. I think the question is one of great difficulty—at least I have found it to be so. Had the writer of the memoranda been living, they could not have been held to be evidence. They might have been used in the witness-box to refresh the memory of the witness. What would be required would be the oath of the witness, and his evidence would be taken irrespective of any weight being put upon the memoranda. It is the oath of the witness and the authority of his statement in the box that the law requires; but if the writer has died, is this circumstance to make such memoranda thenceforward admissible as evidence? There is no check upon the accuracy of these statements, whether arising from innocent mistakes or from prejudice. I do not say that they are supposed to be false, for the idea is repugnant, from the consideration that it would be idle and fanciful to say that such memoranda would be kept by the writer; but it is quite conceivable that statements may be made wholly imaginary, with a view to the subsequent injury of the party; and could it be admissible to take as evidence such a diary, which might be made a baneful instrument of calumny and accusation? I speak just now of private memoranda, diaries, and journals taken in the abstract. As to other writings of a deceased person, such as letters, I do not say that they may not be admissible as evidence after death, for they had been communicated to at least one person. It was contended that the principle of hearsay evidence was admitted to extend to documents written by a deceased person. Words spoken to another are subject to further inquiry by the party spoken to, as to the meaning of the speaker, and a sort of cross-examination made as to the matter which was communicated to him; and all these things may be brought out in the examination of the witness who comes into court and gives us hearsay evidence. Now, a mere writing in the way of memoranda or an entry in a pocket-book, in the sole custody of the writer till his death, cannot be subjected to any such tests. It may be an idle piece of writing, or it may be unfounded suspicion or ambiguous charges preferred by hostile and vindictive feelings in a moody and spiteful mind. This view impressed me strongly against the idea of admitting a journal or diary as evidence to support the prosecution. I think the question before us must be decided as a general point. As such I take it up. If I were to take into account the peculiar circumstances of this case, I see much, perhaps, to vindicate the Court in its reception as evidence, and there is to be found in the letters which have been already read in evidence much to give corroboration and verification to some at least of the entries in the pocket-book; but I feel compelled to close my mind against such considerations, and look, above all, to a general and therefore safe rule by which to be guided. I have come, therefore, to the conclusion that the production of the diary as evidence in the case, in support of the first and second charges, ought to be rejected.

"Lord Ivory said, that, like their Lordships, he had given his most anxious, serious, and unremitting consideration to this subject. He had found little or nothing in the way of authority certainly; but, judging by the abstract rules of evidence applied to other cases, he could find no principle to exclude the document. He therefore felt himself totally unable to come to the conclusion that this evidence should be excluded from the jury. He would content himself with simply intimating his dissent. It appeared to him it was admissible evidence, and it would be for the jury to consider what was the value of that evidence."

ELIZA FENNING'S CASE.

The following letter appeared in the Times of the 5th inst.:—

Sir,—In the late trial at Edinburgh allusion was made by the Dean of Faculty to the case of Eliza Fenning. He mentioned it as illustrating the danger of trusting to circumstantial evidence, and assumed that the verdict had since been proved to be a wrongful one. He is not the first person who has done this; but his position and character give a weight to his statements which does not belong to the writers who have written of late years on the subject, and have made free use of the name of this unhappy woman; and I am induced, therefore, to beg from you the insertion of the following particulars:—

My late uncle, Mr. William Brodie Gurney, short-hand writer to the Houses of Parliament, was well known to a wide circle of friends, and to many of our leading public men, as a man of the strictest integrity. His accuracy, all who were familiar with him can testify, was perfectly unimpeachable. To dress up a story for effect, or to take a side and support it by doubtful statements, was as foreign to his character as robbery or murder. I happened to be spending an evening with him a year or two before his death, and he produced a little book of anecdotes and conversations, in which things worth remembering had been jotted down for his own use, or for those who might come after him. I think he first referred to it for the sake of a remarkable conversation about Dr. Dodd's execution; but, having the book in his hand, he said—"Oh! here is something that will interest you about Eliza Fenning. You have heard, I dare say, that a person of that name was executed for poisoning (or attempting to poison, I forget which) the family with whom she lived as servant, and that a good deal of popular feeling was excited on the subject, many persons being persuaded that she was wrongfully convicted, because she maintained her innocence in prison and on her way to the scaffold." He then read the underwritten statement. I dare say Eliza Fenning will live in history as one unrighteously doomed to death notwithstanding, and that writers who are very capriciously tender of human life will still argue from her case to their conclusion, that poisoners should not be convicted unless some one swears in the witness-box that he saw the poison bought, mixed, and given by the accused party. But, at any rate, it is desirable that the candid and reasonable portion of the public, and especially men of influence and authority like the Dean of Faculty, should know how the case really stands—namely, that Eliza Fenning did confess her guilt in prison to a minister of the Gospel who visited her as a friend; though afterwards, when persons came about her who doubted her guilt, and gave her to understand that a reprieve might be hoped for, she changed her tone, and like Palmer and Patch, and many others whose guilt no one doubts, went out of the world unconfessed.

The extract which follows is copied verbatim from my uncle's note-book, and has been supplied to me by his son, Mr. Joseph Gurney, the present short-hand writer to the Houses of Parliament:—

"Doubts having been on several occasions expressed of the guilt of Eliza Fenning, I feel it my duty to record the facts with reference to her case which came within my knowledge.

"Feeling as strongly as any one can do the objection to the infliction of death by a human tribunal, I still feel that there is a justice due to prosecutors, who are bound conscientiously to speak the truth, and to jurymen, who are sworn to find a verdict according to the evidence, which in many instances has been disregarded.

"Having heard from a friend that the master and mistress of Eliza Fenning were esteemed highly respectable and conscientious, I was glad to find that the doubts entertained referred rather to the question whether the evidence, which was circumstantial, established her guilt. The jury and the judges thought it did, and I believe those who were present at the trial pretty generally concurred. In a few days, however, I heard that her strong asseverations of innocence had created a doubt, and that many who visited her felt a strong interest in her case, believing her to be innocent, and a petition to the King was sent in. The grounds of it were examined by the Secretary of State, the attention of the learned judge was called to the case, and on his report, that he felt no hesitation as to the propriety of the verdict, the law was directed to take its course, which it did. Still some persons retained their doubts.

"Shortly after her execution I heard that the Rev. James Upton, a Baptist minister, preaching in Church-street, Blackfriars-road, had visited her while under sentence of death, having been requested to do so in consequence of her having, when young, attended at his chapel, whether with her family or in the Sunday school I am not aware. I knew him to be a very excellent man—a man of great kindness of heart; I felt satisfied that he would not form a more unfavourable opinion than circumstances called for, and I took an opportunity of seeing him. He informed me that on his entering the cell, Eliza Fenning, with great earnestness and tears, exclaimed that she was innocent of the crime imputed to her—that it was a cruel charge, and so on. That he replied, 'Eliza, I have not come here to talk to you about that. I do not mean to ask you whether you were guilty of that crime or not, but I come to you as a minister of Jesus Christ, hearing that you are probably very shortly about to appear before your Judge, to remind you that you are a sinner, and that unless those sins which you are conscious you have committed are repented of and pardoned, you can have no good hope for eternity. I come to set before you Jesus as a Saviour able and willing to save.' He said, 'I was somewhat affected, considering the situation of this poor girl about to suffer, and I talked to her earnestly, entreating her to seek mercy, and avoiding altogether the subject of her conviction. Before I had done she was quite melted down, and then it all came out.' I said, 'Do you mean that she confessed that crime?' 'Oh yes,' said he, 'there was no reserve then. She confessed that it was all true, and I besought on her behalf the forgiveness of all her sins, and of that among the rest; and I hoped at the time that she had joined in that prayer, but I understand that after this she still persisted in assuring those who visited her of her innocence.'"

I have felt it important to secure a wide circulation for this decisive refutation of a very current story, while the recent trial is fresh in men's minds. Circumstances, to which I need not refer, have prevented an earlier communication, but I hope you will still think it deserving of the publicity which your columns alone can give it. The facts are important with reference to the criminal jurisprudence of the country. But having got upon the subject of reprieves and confessions, I should like, if you will allow me, to go on, and speak of the fearful mischief often done within the walls of prisons by those who profess themselves the friends of doomed criminals. The questionings which go on there, the repeated solicitations to confess, the importance attached to persevering denials of guilt, must necessarily have a blinding effect on those who are thus beset.

Numbers, I believe, will not confess, just because so much is made of confession. "They want me to confess that they may feel secure in hanging me" is the natural feeling at such times. "The verdict does not satisfy them unless I admit its justice. I won't do that. If I deny my guilt stoutly, I shall, perhaps, be believed at last, and escape." Thus, during the awful interval which is the murderer's brief preparation time for eternity, he is balancing probabilities of escape, demeaning himself so as to make a favourable impression on bystanders, heaping up lies which, by possibility, he thinks may gain him long time for repentance hereafter—doing anything, in fact, but realising his position, and opening his ears to the godly counsel of those who desire to save his soul alive. If a criminal wishes to confess, there is no hindrance in his way. The penitent, without compulsion, will unlock the secrets of his heart to his spiritual adviser at any rate, and to the world at large I do not know that he is bound to proclaim his guilt. Importunity, on the other hand, will not wring out of the dogged malefactor what he is determined to conceal; and if he is to be softened at all, and brought to a better mind, it must be, not by repeating questions to which he has given one answer already—not by turning his thoughts back again to life, and suggesting the hope that oft-repeated asseverations will stay the uplifted hand of justice, but by going to work as good Mr. Upton did, speaking compassionately, as a sinner to a fellow-sinner, of our common guilt and the common redemption, appealing to the conscience, stating plainly that all transgressions, secret and open, must be repented of, and pointing to the Lamb of God, whose blood cleanseth from all sin, while to the impenitent and unbelieving, the hardened and self-justifying, it is declared plainly that there remaineth only judgment without mercy. "It all came out," says the narrator, when he thus addressed the poor girl, whom he had known in happier days. Alas! she had other advisers afterwards—persons who meant kindly, but who did her fearful wrong. The confession was retracted. Hope was strong, doubtless, in that young bosom, and the efforts making on her behalf were sure to be reported to her. Between her cell and the scaffold the ordinary "stopped her for a moment," says the Annual Register, "to ask her if in her last moments she had anything to communicate." (She had better, surely, have been let alone; her tongue was not tied; she could speak then, as before, all she wished to speak. Who shall say that she might not hope, even then, that another lie might save her? It did make her a heroine and a supposed martyr with the populace). "She paused a moment, and said, 'Before the just and Almighty God, and by the faith of the holy sacrament I have taken, I am innocent of the offence with which I am charged.'" By her own confession, at another time, she was a murderess; dying thus, with a lie upon her lips, she was no penitent. My fear is, that the time of probation was lost, the faithful admonition forgotten, the course of repentance arrested, and the soul retained in the bondage of sin, because she was buoyed up with false hopes; and her fatal gifts of youth and beauty, coupled with protestations of innocence, made a party in her favour, who hoped, up to the last hour, to extort a reprieve from Government.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

FINLASON, Esq., Barrister at Law.

"This is, in our judgment, a most excellent and carefully written book. The equity powers given to the Common-law Courts are admirably done. The views taken by Mr. Finlason of the practical bearing and operation of these acts are remarkably shrewd and suggestive. Such men, and their editions of statutes, tend very greatly to improve the laws they expound, and powerfully assist the objects of the Legislature."—Law Magazine, Feb. 1855.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, AUGUST 22, 1857.

Within the last thirty years the law of bankruptcy, especially the administrative part of it, has been several times remodelled, and apparently has yet to undergo much further modification. The Lord Chancellor has promised to devote his best energies to the subject during the recess, and we may reasonably hope that in the course of the next session he will justify the expectation which his promise has occasioned, by presenting us with a bold and comprehensive measure of bankruptcy reform. But the initiative upon this question has now, as heretofore, been taken by Lord Brougham, who has introduced into the House of Lords a bill which embodies the improvements suggested by the Mercantile Conference, so far as these coincide with the conclusions of his own experience. By this step his Lordship has brought prominently before the notice of the Legislature and the public the principal wants and wishes of those whom the bankrupt law most intimately concerns—the inhabitants of the great manufacturing and commercial towns—and has furnished to the Lord Chancellor abundant materials wherewith to occupy the leisure time of his vacation.

We propose to comment shortly upon the alterations which Lord Brougham recommends, but according to our own arrangement; and first with respect to the officers and judges of the court. The most important of these officers, the official assignee, is now paid by a per-centage upon the amount of the assets which he collects. The consequence has been that the emoluments of the office have fluctuated considerably at various times and in different places. In some districts the realisation of bankrupts' estates has been attended with exorbitant profits; while in others the official assignee has received a sum barely sufficient to reimburse his expenses. Lord Brougham advises—and in this he follows the unanimous opinion of the delegates to the Conference—that for the future the remuneration should consist partly of a salary and partly of fees, by which latter we understand him to mean a per-centage on a diminished scale. In this amendment we are very much inclined to concur. It may happen that an official assignee will be employed throughout the year in scraping together a variety of properties, the value of which is very insignificant, but the difficulties to be encountered and the trouble involved in the collection quite as great as in the case of large estates. Surely, therefore, he is entitled to expect in every instance something like a competent reward for his valuable services; and we do not see how this can possibly be secured except by a fixed stipend. At the same time it is very desirable to preserve that incentive to zeal and punctuality in the discharge of his duties which is afforded by making it his interest to exert those qualities to the utmost stretch. If necessary, we might always preclude the possibility of unreasonable gains by putting a maximum upon the income which the assignee may obtain from the per centage. The office of accountant in bankruptcy his Lordship proposes altogether to abolish, as well as to dispense with the services of the broker. Although it would perhaps be difficult to contend that the benefit of retaining these two functionaries is commensurate with the expense incurred, still we have some doubt about the expediency of transferring the work of the accountant to other hands. There is a pretty general wish that the sphere of the Court of Bankruptcy should be enlarged rather than contracted, and we can detect a disposition among many eminent personages to pour into it a flood of business which is now, perhaps, less conveniently transacted in other courts. For instance, it does not require the gift of divination to foresee that the commissioners, who have already been intrusted under the new act with the winding up of limited joint-stock companies, may one day absorb within their jurisdiction all companies, without regard to the extent of liability. The present compromise with the Court of Chancery has admitted the fact that the bankruptcy judges are competent to deal with such cases, and in the course of time the duty of collecting and distributing the assets of defunct joint-stock companies must be assigned to that court, the proceedings of which are least dilatory and expensive, and the machinery the best adapted to the purpose. Moreover, as his Lordship pointed out, it may hereafter be thought expedient to annihilate the distinction between trader and non-trader with reference to insolvency, and thus to invest the commissioners with all the additional jurisdiction of the Insolvent Court; and by these means the functions of the accountant would become so augmented that it might be dangerous to amalgamate them with those of any other officer.

One of the greatest evils of which the Conference complained was the cost attending upon the administration of the bankruptcy law; and upon this point we cannot do better than quote his Lordship's own words. "Taking one district," his Lordship said, "he would not mention the name, where there were 121 bankruptcies in the year 1854–55, it was found that the sum collected under these bankruptcies was 90,000*l.*, of which only 44,000*l.* was distributed among the creditors, leaving between 45*l.* and 50*l.* per cent. of the whole sum for the expenses of administering the bankruptcies. This arose mainly from the fact that the salaries and expenses of the administration were paid by fees. But though no one was more desirous than he that the system of payment by fees should be abolished, he made a great distinction as between litigation and administration. He was of opinion, however, that the higher officers of the Court of Bankruptcy should be paid by salaries, as in the (other?) courts of justice, and not thrown for remuneration upon the creditors. There was at this moment 25,000*l.* a year paid as compensation to those commissioners of bankruptcy who had been displaced in 1831, all of which came out of the suitors' fund in that court. This he held to be unendurable, and he was clearly of opinion that it ought to be placed upon the Consolidated Fund." To this statement of Lord Brougham we have only to add, that the claims for compensation mentioned by him are not the only ones which have been discharged out of the pockets of the suitors; and if we are not much mistaken, their fund, as it is sarcastically called, has from that time down to a very recent period indeed, been continually overladen with fresh and unfair impositions.

It was further suggested by members of the Conference, that the estates of deceased persons, who if they had lived would have been made bankrupt, should be administered under the control of the Bankruptcy Court. The object of this proposal appears to be to avoid the cost of needless litigation in Chancery, and at the same time to effect a more expeditious and impartial distribution of the effects of a trader who has died insolvent than can now in general be obtained. In bankruptcy the different classes of creditors stand upon a more equal footing than elsewhere; and we do not fancy that business is dispatched by executors or administrators, or even in a judge's chambers, with greater celerity, and more economically, than it is, or at any rate might be, in a commercial court. What degree of favour the Lord Chancellor may accord to the proposal we cannot tell; but it is at least worthy of consideration whether the death of a trader after having committed an act of bankruptcy, but before adjudication, should be suffered to prejudice the interests of his creditors. The objection that a bankrupt is entitled to be heard in person against the adjudication can hardly now be entertained; for by the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 26, and again by the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 116, it was provided, that if any bankrupt should die after adjudication, the Court might proceed in the bankruptcy as if such bankrupt were still living.

That feature, however, of the law of bankruptcy to which Lord Brougham invited the most particular attention we have reserved for the last. That was the system of appeals, as to which the Conference recommended that the duty of reviewing an original decision of the Court should be committed to three commissioners, including the one before whom the matter was heard, instead of to the Lords Justices. Whatever may be thought of the merits of this plan, there can be no doubt that the method which now prevails has awakened great dissatisfaction. It is a very common practice for an appellant, especially on questions appertaining to the certificate, to submit to the Lords Justices a totally different case from that on which he relied before the inferior judge. This case he supports by affidavits, often so artfully concocted, by suppressing what has appeared to the Court below to be unfavourable or suspicious, and insisting strenuously on what he conceives likely to conciliate the judicial sympathies, as, without any positive misstatement, to convey an entirely erroneous impression of the facts. Upon these affidavits the order against which the appeal has been made is not unfrequently reversed or varied, without any personal examination of the witnesses, with whose bearing and demeanour the commissioner was thoroughly acquainted, and from whom he has probably elicited the truth—not to mention that during the progress of the inquiry before him he has been enabled to acquire from other sources a much more accurate knowledge of the real state of the bankrupt's affairs than their Lordships can ever attain. Even if the witnesses were always compelled to attend before the Lords Justices, and to give their testimony by word of mouth, it does not by any means follow that that perfect justice would be done which the Lord Chancellor seemed to imagine. A second scrutiny into matters of fact, especially after a long interval, is almost always a most stale and unsavoury affair. The witnesses may be dishonest, and anxious to conceal or distort the truth. Upon their first interrogation they have most likely been caught unprepared, and perhaps kept apart from each other during the investigation. But when they are brought again before the Court, they come well primed with a story which their previous ordeal has taught them to concert and adjust beforehand; and the lapse of time furnishes them with an excellent excuse for any discrepancies that may be detected in their evidence. Even a new trial at law, on the ground that the jury have found a verdict against the weight of evidence, is never directed until sufficient cause has first been clearly shewn; and when it is ordered, it is not the Court of error which presides over the inquiry. If a commissioner is competent to ascertain the facts at all, his verdict ought to be final. If not, the inference is, that he is unfit for his post, and ought to be removed. It is not so much our province as that of the Legislature to invent a remedy for these defects; but there is one so obvious that we are constrained to notice it. A summary of the evidence might be drawn up in the form of a special case, and this statement, when approved by the commissioner, the Court of Appeal might be bound to treat as complete and accurate. We should thus at least avoid the inconvenience of a second controversy about the facts, and the scandal of allowing the capacity of a judge to preside over the examination of witnesses to be tested by two other judges, who may be far less familiar with oral examinations, and at the same time not so conversant with the customs of traders, which often form the subject of the interrogatories. Perhaps, however, the aim of the Conference goes further than this: they may, as we have done, find it difficult to discover upon what principles the Lords Justices have exercised the discretionary powers with which the Court of Bankruptcy is invested; and may think that the sentences of the commissioners in such cases are more in accordance with the opinions of the mercantile classes, and much better calculated to promote good faith and integrity among those engaged in trade.

THE STATUTE-LAW COMMISSION.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—Ample confirmation and illustration of your remarks on the Statute-law Commission are to be found in the Third Report of the commissioners, presented about a month ago.

"One reason," you observe, "why so little progress has been made in so considerable a time appears to be this—that really no definite or fixed plan of consolidation has been adopted." You might have added, "or is likely to be adopted by this commission." The commission—I prefer to treat it as an impersonality, and to say nothing of the able and eminent men whose misfortune it is to have been appointed to a task which they cannot ever seriously enter upon—the commission is not even in search of a plan of procedure; it is unconscious that it wants a plan. The Third Report contains this passage:—

"In laying down rules for the consolidation of the statute law, we have felt it impossible to adopt one universal principle. It will be observed that our task is to consolidate the existing law, not to frame a code of general law founded on that which now exists, nor, in fact, to make a digest of the statute law with additions or alterations; we therefore find it necessary to treat the different classes of statutes according to particular circumstances. Thus many statutes of ancient date, which have been through a course of ages expounded by the Courts, must now be regarded rather as the basis than as the whole structure of the existing law, and can hardly be made the subject of simple consolidation." Magna Charta, the Statute Quia Emptores, and the Statute of Uses are instanced, and it is proposed that such statutes should, without enactment, be merely classified and reprinted. "There is another class of statutes which it would not be possible to consolidate in the mere terms of the existing enactments. We allude to those which consist of a series of fragmentary alterations of or additions to the common law—such, for instance, as those which have been passed to regulate the relation of landlord and tenant. We have caused a bill on that subject to be prepared, but the effect of so incoherent a collection of exceptions without the rules, and explanations or additions without the thing explained or added to, part in antiquated and part in modern language, is certainly not satisfactory; and it appears to us at least doubtful whether, in cases of this kind, anything like a complete and intelligible enactment can be produced," [Does the commission mean to say that the existing enactments are unintelligible?], "unless we rewrite the law, availing ourselves occasionally of our power to embody the common law."

Evidently it is impossible for this commission "to adopt one universal principle." In two consecutive paragraphs it propounds two contradictory principles of procedure. It proposes to leave outstanding and unconsolidated those ancient statutes which have become embedded in, and inseparable from, the common law: it also proposes to cement together the fragmentary enactments of modern legislation, by "embodying" the common law. If either of these proposals is right, the other must be wrong. If a statute is not fit for consolidation because it has acquired the nature of common law—that is to say, because its meaning and effect are to be read, not in its own words, but in decisions—still less can the common law, which exists in decisions only, be fit for consolidation. If, on the other hand, any part of the common law may properly be made into a statute, no part of the statute law can, merely because it has been developed into common law, be unfit for that process. It would be incredible, if it were not true, that though this commission has been at work upon the statute law since December, 1854, and has prepared, as we are told, forty-eight consolidation bills, it has not yet learned that—not merely this or that class of statutes, but—the entire statute law is essentially, and must for ever be, "a series of fragmentary alterations of, or additions to, the common law"—a necessary evil—law in its worst form—a collection of rules, each stretched or mutilated on the Procrustean bed of a verbal formula. The first enactment that is printed in the Statutes at Large (passing over the vague assurance that the church shall be free) is, that the relief of the heir of an earl shall be 100*l.*; the last, of the present session, will probably consist of certain exceptions to the rule that marriage is indissoluble; and yet we are told that certain statutes ought not to be consolidated because they are fragmentary! Can the commission tell for what purpose the consolidation of the statutes is required? It would be too much to expect of it. Indeed, I am inclined to infer from the tenor of its reports, and particularly from a remark at the end of the last report, (that "it would be necessary under any circumstances, if an edition of the statutes adapted to the wants of the public is to be produced, to add, in a supplement or otherwise, the laws" repealed but still regulating decisions on past transactions), that the commission agrees with the credulous public in supposing that its mission is to produce a readable edition of the existing statute law—an improved "Chitty's Statutes of general utility." It can only have been in preparation for this result, if not to amuse the vulgar, that the "Act to repeal certain statutes which are not in use" (19 & 20 Vict. c. 64, the solitary achievement of the commission) was prepared.

The commission has yet to learn that the sole end of consolidation is the improvement of the statute law for the future in substance and in expression—the laying of a foundation for methodical legislation, by so expressing and arranging the written law for the time being in force as written law, (the old statutes referred to in the above extract from the Third Report are not now in force as statutes), that whenever an alteration is necessary, it may be made upon consideration of every part of the written law which it is to affect, and be expressed according to the most approved rules of legislative expression, and, when settled, be put in the place of that which it is to supersede, instead of being laid upon it like a patch. So far is the commission from understanding this, that it actually proposes to take no notice of recent statutes which have been only slightly modified by subsequent amending acts.

How does the commission propose to set about the consolidation of those statutes which it thinks fit for the process? In the Third Report is this passage—"In order to assist us in arranging those parts of the contents of the statute-book which it may be deemed expedient to consolidate, ... we some time since gave instructions for an examination of the statute-book, and for a classification, in the manner explained in the last-mentioned Report, of such acts as are not repealed or expired, or have not otherwise ceased to be operative. As this work is proceeded with, a 'register' is made of the acts of each session as they are examined, shewing the acts wholly or partially repealed or otherwise affected by the acts registered, the subsequent acts by which the acts registered are themselves repealed or otherwise affected, and which of the acts registered are expired or are otherwise no longer in operation, and classifying all the acts still in force." This is preliminary to consolidation. In the meantime forty-eight consolidation bills are ready! A specimen of the register is given in an appendix to the Third Report. It includes the acts of the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict., and contains entries in columns under the following heads:—1. Chapter. 2. Subject-matter. 3. Class, (the classes being—Armed Force, Revenue, Financial, United Kingdom, Great Britain, England and Ireland, England, Scotland, Ireland, Local and Special, (subdivided), Colonies, East Indies, Slave Trade). 4. Sections affecting or referring to acts in the next column. 5. Acts affected or referred to by acts here registered. 6. Subsequent acts, by which acts here registered are affected or referred to. 7. When acts here registered are expired or spent. 8. Duration of acts here registered, when temporary and unexpired. 9. Remarks. It is evident that the only columns of any importance are the 5th and 6th. There is no other information in the table but what is patent on each act, and cannot be missed by any one who has to deal with it, and is useless in a tabular form. Now, the columns 5 and 6 are delusive, and do not contain what they profess to contain, nor any useful information. They do not shew all the acts affected by the acts registered, nor all the acts by which those acts are affected. They shew only (as is candidly stated by the learned and able gentlemen who have prepared the register, and for whom I wish more worthy occupation) those acts which are expressly referred to in, or expressly refer to, the registered act. For example, the stat. 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 80, (exemption from usury laws of certain bills and notes), is registered as extending the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 98, and not as affecting any other statute. No reference to the 12 Ann, st. 2, c. 16, which it repealed as to certain transactions, (and which is not cited in the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 98). Constructed on such a principle the register is worse than useless—it is a snare. We do not want to know what statutes are expressly mentioned in a given statute, nor by what statutes a given statute is expressly noticed. We want, and the draftsman wants, a guide to all the statutes in any way affecting a given subject. We want, among other things, a commentary on such a slovenly enactment as this—"All enactments inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed." How is this to be done? It is only to be done by hard and honest labour, directed by intelligence, and proceeding upon a well-considered plan. It can only be done by settling a scheme of classification, in which every possible enactment, however particular or minute, will find its certain and appropriate place, and by arranging the whole contents of the statute-book according to that scheme. When this is done, half the work is done. In the course of doing it, expressly repealed, expired, and obsolete matter will disappear, and inconsistent enactments will be brought face to face, and the draftsman will then know how to deal with them, or what treatment to recommend.

But what encouragement have the draftsmen under this commission? They have neither adequate pay nor honour. We never hear their names, unless, as in the case of Mr. Lonsdale, we are told of some work left incomplete. The Lord Chancellor the other day, in the House of Lords, referring to the above-mentioned bill for the consolidation of the law of landlord and tenant, (by Mr. Bisset, I find), praised it as a work of great labour and ability, by a gentleman "whose name he had forgotten." The commissioners say they have received forty-one bills from the draftsmen, but do not tell us who they are. Amateurs are better treated. Mr. Tapping and Mr. Edward Cooke, who have "obligingly presented" the commission with bills, have their names embalmed in the Report.

Let us not despair, however. The Report concludes with the confession that the commission finds it has got a tough job. In the (perhaps simple) hope that it will speedily give it up and pass on, I am, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

EXSPECTANS RUSTICUS.

August 1, 1857. Cranworth, C.

THE SELECT COMMITTEE ON OATHS TAKEN BY MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT.

The following is the report from the Select Committee on Oaths taken by Members, together with the proceedings of the committee:—At the first sitting Lord John Russell, at the instance of Mr. Disraeli, was moved into the chair. The committee then deliberated and considered the provisions of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 62. On the following day a motion was made and question proposed by the Attorney-General—"That in the opinion of this committee the House of Commons is included within the following words of the 8th section of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 62—that is to say, 'all bodies now by law, or by statute, or by any valid usage, authorised to administer or receive any oath.'" Mr. Disraeli moved an amendment, to leave out from the word "that" to the end of the question, in order to add the words "it is expedient, before it comes to any decision on the matter referred to its investigation by the House, that this committee should obtain permission from the House to hear counsel on the application of the stat. 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 62, to the Houses of Parliament;" but this amendment was, by leave, withdrawn. On the motion of the right hon. gentleman, it was agreed, by fourteen votes to nine, to postpone the consideration of the question. On the third day of meeting (Monday, Aug. 10) the committee took into consideration an amendment moved by Mr. Warren at the previous sitting, viz. to leave out from the word "committee" to the end of the question, in order to add the words "it would be expedient, regard being had to the late period of the session, and the public and private engagements of its members, that they should report to the House that the committee deem it advisable that it should be reappointed at the commencement of the ensuing session." It was agreed, however, "that the words 'that in the opinion of this committee the' stand part of the question." The main question was then put—"That in the opinion of this committee the House of Commons is included within the following words of the 8th section of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 62—that is to say, "all bodies now by law or statute, or by any valid usage, authorised to administer or receive any oath." The committee divided: Ayes, 13—Mr. Dillwyn, Mr. Disraeli, Mr. Headlam, Mr. Horsman, Mr. Attorney-General, Mr. Roebuck, Lord Stanley, Sir J. Pakington, the Lord Advocate, Mr. Villiers, Mr. Ayrton, Mr. Greer, Mr. Bowyer. Noes, 16—Mr. Cobbett, Mr. Gladstone, Sir George Grey, Mr. Henley, Mr. Malins, Mr. Napier, Mr. Rolt, Mr. Walpole, Mr. Whiteside, Lord J. Manners, Mr. Macaulay, Mr. Wigram, Mr. Adams, Mr. Fitzgerald, Mr. Craufurd, Mr. Maguire. The committee agreed to report to the House as follows:—The following resolution was proposed by a member of the committee:—"That in the opinion of this committee the House of Commons is included within the following words of the 8th section of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 62—that is to say, 'all bodies now by law or statute, or by any valid usage, authorised to administer or receive any oath.' Upon deliberation, the resolution passed in the negative."

In many other matters the law has been materially altered, and doubtful points have been settled by recently-decided cases, all which are now to be found in the present edition.

The views taken by Mr. Finlason of the practical bearing and operation of these acts are remarkably shrewd and suggestive. Such men, and their editions of statutes, tend very greatly to improve the laws they expound, and powerfully assist the objects of the Legislature."—Law Magazine, Feb. 1855.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, AUGUST 29, 1857.

Our readers are, no doubt, aware, that in consequence of the urgent necessity for amending the Joint-stock Companies Act of last session, which had already become apparent, another act was introduced at an early period of this session, and has already become law. (20 & 21 Vict. c. 14). We now propose, without further preface or comment, to direct attention to its principal provisions; and in so doing we shall present our remarks rather according to the correct classification of its clauses than according to the order in which they appear in the act. After providing that the two acts shall, as far as possible, be read together, there are certain clauses providing for the conversion of paid-up capital into stock, and extending the provisions of the original act of 1856, (which is throughout called "the principal act"), with reference to shares, to the capital when so converted into stock. (Sects. 5 to 8, and sect. 30). Sect. 9 extends the power of the Court, under sect. 25 of the principal act, with reference to disputes about the register, and enables it to decide on any question which it may be necessary or expedient to decide for the rectification of the register relating to the title of any person, party to such proceeding, to have his name entered in or erased from the register, whether the question arises between him and the company, or between him and any other holder or alleged holder of shares or stock. Sect. 10 imposes a penalty on the company for not complying with the 27th section of the principal act.

Then, with reference to winding up, there are certain clauses (sects. 11 and 12) providing for the arrest of any contributory likely to abscond or make away with his property, and for his discharge upon application to a judge. Sect. 13 makes a call on a contributory, when the company is being wound up, a specialty debt. There are a series of clauses with reference to official liquidators, extending the powers of the Courts and of the liquidators, and more strictly defining the powers of the latter in some respects, and giving remedies against them for default of duty.

Then there are three very important practical clauses, the 4th, 22nd, and 24th. The 4th provides, that on payment of 5*s*. the registrar shall give a certificate of incorporation of any company to any person applying for it, and then says that such certificate shall be admissible in evidence in like manner as the certificate of incorporation required to be given by the principal act. The latter part of the section is rather incomprehensible, for by the principal act it is said that the registrar shall certify under his hand that the company is incorporated, and that the certificate of incorporation so given shall be conclusive evidence that the requirements of the act have been complied with. The early part of the section says that on a particular event the registrar shall certify, and the latter that the certificate given by the registrar shall be conclusive evidence, as above; and we suppose that it was imagined that the only certificate which would have that effect would be the one originally given, and that therefore it was necessary to give the same weight to any other which may be given; but if that be the object of the new provision, it is using very strange language to say that such other certificate shall be as admissible in evidence as the former. It is difficult to suppose that the Legislature could make such a confusion between the admissibility of evidence and its weight; still, if that be not the object of the provision, we are at a loss to see what is; for one certificate given by the proper officer who is required to certify would be just as admissible in evidence as another, and there could be no object in making so wholly unnecessary a provision. We are therefore driven to adopt the above conclusion, although it may seem to involve some inaccuracy of language, but not greater than we find in other acts of Parliament on the same subject. For example, we find that by the 19th section of the Joint-stock Banks Act a certified copy of the memorial is to be received in evidence as proof of its contents; whereas by the 15th section of the old Joint-stock Companies Act, which, it will be recollected, was passed in the same year, and was intended to carry out the same principles as the former, certified copies of the returns required to be made by the act are simply to be received in evidence, without proof of the signature, &c. But although this may have been the object of the proviso which we are discussing, it certainly is open to doubt how far the presumed intention has been carried out, and whether any other certificate is conclusive evidence than that which the registrar is required to give under the 13th section of the principal act.

The 22nd section removes an important difficulty, by providing that in case of any alteration of the rules in Table (B.) being made by the Board of Trade in pursuance of its statutory powers, such alteration shall not affect any companies already constituted, unless they think fit to adopt it by a special resolution.

The 24th section gives to the defendant, in any action at the suit of a company with limited liability, the right to compel such company to give security for costs, and to have the proceedings stayed in the meantime, and is, we have no hesitation in saying, a most valuable clause, but at the same time is hardly a sufficient remedy for the evil at which it is aimed. The monstrosity of allowing a company to bring an action in formâ pauperis—for that was really the effect—and leaving you liable for costs in case it should succeed, was too great to be allowed to continue. But is the evil less when the company is defendant? Let us suppose an extreme case, for the purpose of testing the operation of the law. A company owes you 1000*l.*; its capital is 1000*l.*, which is paid up, and in hand. Out of mere wantonness the company refuses to pay you, or perhaps harasses you with a vexatious defence, which may compel you to go to the House of Lords. It would be hard enough if you only had to pay your own costs, as in fact you would have to do under such a state of circumstances; but what is the result? In the meantime their costs have been paid out of the capital, which ought to have gone to pay your debt; and when finally you get judgment, instead of there being 1000*l.* to meet your debt, there is only 500*l.*; and although you are successful, you have been paying the costs on both sides; or perhaps they may put you to wind up the company, and pay the costs of that proceeding also; and notwithstanding all this, they are in no worse position, and can be in no worse, for their liability is limited to the capital so paid up, and they will only have to pay the same amount as they would have done in the first instance, but you will have only the jackal's share. It will, however, be said, "That is a case which, though possible, is so extreme as to form no substantial objection to the law." But that observation goes only to degree, and if the evil be one which is at all likely to exist, though only in degree, it is one so grave that a remedy ought speedily to be provided. That it will exist is probable; that it does exist already we have some evidence; and we submit that its possible existence is an unanswerable argument in support of the view which we have put forward in this journal, that no man in his senses ought to have any dealings with these companies except the merest ready-money transactions. To take credit is almost as unsafe as to give it: you must have no transactions which can by any possibility involve you in litigation, unless you are willing to run the risk of a greater or less loss.

The remaining sections of the act relate to the status of companies which may or must be registered under this and the principal act, and to the consequences which may accrue to persons trading in partnership contrary to the provisions of the act. As to the latter part, the 4th section of the principal act, which made the members of any partnership having gain for its object, and consisting of more than twenty persons, severally liable for the debts of the concern, unless forming a company registered under the act, or being within the exceptions of that clause, was supposed to leave it doubtful whether companies or partnerships formed for the purpose of some profit or advantage to the individual members, but not to the company at large, were within the provision, as in the case of the companies which formed the subject of Reg. v. Whitmarsh (15 Q. B. 600; 15 Jur., part 1, p. 7; 19 L. J., Q. B., 469) and Bear v. Bromley, (16 Jur., part 1, p. 450; 21 L. J., Q. B., 354). That section has therefore been repealed, and re-enacted in an altered form, (sect. 3), the words now being, "having for its object the procurement of gain to the partnership." So that that point is set at rest. There is also an alteration in the description in the second class of trading societies allowed by this section, on which we may possibly have to comment by and by; that class is now described as "companies incorporated or otherwise legally constituted by or in pursuance of any act of Parliament, royal charter, or letters-patent," instead of, as in the repealed section, "companies authorised to carry on business by some private act of Parliament, or by royal charter or letters-patent."

Our readers will probably recollect that we pointed out what appeared to us very important defects in the wording of the sections which form the fifth part of the act of 1856, relating to the repeal of the former acts and the temporary provisions. The important sections (sects. 107, 108, and 113) are entirely repealed, and other provisions substituted. But before adverting to the change it will be advisable for us to consider the difficulties which existed, or appeared to exist, on the construction of the repealed sections. Companies existing at the time of the passing of the act of 1856, and incorporated under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, were required to be registered under the new act on or before the 3rd November, 1856, but there was nothing apparently to compel such companies to be so registered; and the latter part of the 107th section providing that the repeal of the old act should not affect such companies until registered anew under the act of 1856, a doubt arose, upon the construction of those sections, as to what was the position of such companies having neglected to register by the 3rd November, or refusing to do so altogether, and incidentally as to the effect produced on insurance companies by the absolute terms in which the stat. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, was repealed. We do not propose in any way to renew the discussion of those sections, but only to point out the reason why they required to be altered, in order that we may understand the alterations which have taken place. The 27th section of the act of this year extends the time for the registration of the old companies to the 2nd November, 1857, by which time they are required to be registered; and the 28th section, in order to compel them to be so registered, provides the following penalties in case of default—first, that the company shall be incapable of suing in any court of law or equity; secondly, that no dividend shall be payable; and, thirdly, that each director or manager of the company shall be liable to a penalty of 5l. per day during the time of such default; but, except in these respects, the company will remain unaffected, and subject to the provisions of the old act, which for that purpose is to be considered as unrepealed until it is so registered. Also, by the 25th section, the registration of companies which were registered under the act of 1856, after the 3rd November, but before the passing of that of 1857, is to be considered as effectual as if it had taken place before that day: so that in these two respects the doubts which existed are entirely removed. Then the 29th section provides for the case of other lawfully constituted companies, and in substance re-enacts the latter part of the 110th section; but the description of companies which may be registered at their own option is slightly varied; it is now, "any company consisting of seven or more shareholders, having capital of fixed amount, divided into shares, also of fixed amount, duly constituted by law prior to the passing of the act, and not being a company hereby required to be registered." There was another question of some importance arising on the construction of the 113th section, which made the deed of settlement or charter of an existing company, when registered anew under the principal act, "regulations of the company within the meaning of the act," and declared that all the provisions of the act should apply to the company in the same manner as if it had been originally incorporated under that act; and it was doubted whether that effectually excluded the application of Table (B.), subject to the deed or charter, and also whether there was power to alter the deed or charter by special resolution; and to meet that doubt the section is repealed, and in lieu thereof it is provided that all the provisions contained in the act of Parliament, deed of settlement, letters-patent, or other instrument of incorporation constituting or regulating the company, shall be deemed to be regulations of the company in the same manner as if they were contained in any registered memorandum and articles of association, and then that the company shall be treated in all respects as any other company formed under the act, except subject to certain provisoes. First, Table (B.) is not to apply to such a company, unless adopted by special resolution. Secondly, no company shall have power to alter any provision contained in any act of Parliament relating to the company at all; or, thirdly, in any letters-patent, without the consent of the Board of Trade. Lastly, no company is to alter any of the provisions in the instrument which incorporates it, which, by the 5th section of the principal act, are required to be prescribed by the memorandum of association, and not authorised to be altered by the acts of 1856 and 1857.

We have now presented to our readers as briefly as possible the principal changes in the law, and in so doing we have not attempted to discuss in detail the effect of those changes in particular instances, as it is manifest that that could not be done within the limits of a single article. There will certainly be many points open to discussion, and of no small importance; as, for instance, the position of insurance companies, which is rendered still more doubtful than before; and unless the construction for which we contended, viz. that the 2nd section overrides the whole act, and leaves the old statute unrepealed, so far as they are concerned, be correct, the utmost confusion will be found to prevail. But we must defer our remarks upon these points to a subsequent occasion. We will only remark, in conclusion, that the alterations which have been already made in the principal act shew that the remarks which we ventured to make upon the wording of the repealed sections, and for the rigour of which we were somewhat called to account, were fully justified.

THE THIRD REPORT OF THE STATUTE-LAW COMMISSIONERS.

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty in her High Court of Chancery.

We, your Majesty's Commissioners for Consolidating the Statute Law, do hereby humbly make this our Third Report to your Majesty.

In our First Report (dated July 10, 1855) we gave a list of the works which we had caused to be undertaken down to that date, which were as follows:—

1. Consolidation of the National Debt Acts.
2. Consolidation of the Statutes relating to Masters and Servants or Workmen.
3. Consolidation of the Criminal Law, (by Mr. J. J. Lonsdale).
4. Consolidation of the Stamp Laws.
5. Consolidation of the Statutes relating to Bills of Exchange and Promissory Notes.
6. Consolidation of the Statutes relating to Prisons.
7. Consolidation of the Law of Landlord and Tenant.
8. Consolidation of the Statutes relating to Leases by Ecclesiastical and Collegiate Corporations.
9. Bill to consolidate and amend the Copyhold Commissioners Acts.

As we have found it expedient, on further consideration, to modify in some respects the plan on which we were then proceeding, it is necessary that we should make a further statement as to the present state of the works referred to.

The bills Nos. 1 and 6 in the above list, being consolidations of the statutes relating to the national debt and to prisons, we have not thought it expedient to revise at present, because we conceive that they can be brought forward more advantageously in connexion with the whole of the class or division of law to which they respectively belong, after we have made some further progress in the general distribution of the contents of the statutes upon fixed principles of arrangement. The consolidation of the national debt acts has, however, been submitted to the Chancellor of the Exchequer for his consideration.

The bill No. 2 is now in an advanced state of preparation.

The bill No. 5 in the list—a consolidation of the law of bills of exchange and promissory notes—has been revised, and now forms part of a group of consolidations of the mercantile law, to which we shall presently advert.

With regard to No. 3 in the above list—the consolidation of the criminal law—Mr. J. J. Lonsdale, who was originally employed in the work, having been appointed a county court judge, was unable to proceed with it, and we thereupon intrusted the work to five other gentlemen, who have framed a consolidation of the general criminal law, so far as relates to indictable offences, in eight bills, of which we shall speak more at length hereafter.

No. 4 in the above list—the consolidation of the stamp laws—which was undertaken with the concurrence of the late Mr. John Wood when chairman of the Board of Inland Revenue, has been now completed and delivered to us, and has been referred to the present head of that board, and to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, for consideration.

Nos. 7 and 8 in the list—the consolidation of the law of landlord and tenant, and the consolidation of the statutes relating to ecclesiastical and collegiate leases—have both been now completed and delivered to us by the draftsmen, and form part of a group of consolidations of the law of property, to which we shall presently advert.

The bill for consolidating and amending the copyhold commissioners acts (No. 9 in the above list) has not yet been brought in by the Lord Chancellor, it having been deemed expedient by his Lordship to effect certain desired amendments of the law by a short separate act, which should afterwards be incorporated by consolidation with the other acts.

We now proceed to state the progress that we have made since the date of our First Report.

I. We have given much consideration to the question of the appointment and functions of an officer for the revision of current legislation. The result of our deliberations was embodied in a separate Report, which we submitted to your Majesty on the 5th March, 1856.

II. In order to assist us in arranging those parts of the contents of the Statute-book which it may be deemed expedient to consolidate, and with particular reference to the distinction pointed out in our Report of the 5th March, 1856, between the general laws forming the permanent rule of civil conduct and those which are administrative, transitory, or local, we some time since gave instructions for an examination of the Statute-book, and for a classification, in the manner explained in the last-mentioned Report, of such acts as are not repealed or expired, or have not otherwise ceased to be operative.

As this work is proceeded with, a "register" is made of the acts of each session as they are examined, shewing the acts wholly or partially repealed or otherwise affected by the acts registered, the subsequent acts by which the acts registered are themselves repealed or otherwise affected, and which of the acts registered are expired, or are otherwise no longer in operation, and classifying all the acts still in force.

In an Appendix to this Report will be found papers explaining more in detail the plan of the above work, together with a specimen of the register.

The register and classified arrangement, by affording a comprehensive view of the contents of the Statute-book, will greatly assist us in determining what portions of the statute law can be usefully consolidated; and when they have been completed, and when it has been ascertained further what statutes are impliedly repealed, will in fact shew at once what is the existing general statute law. The register will also materially facilitate the actual work of consolidation; and, independently of this, we conceive that it would, if published, be found valuable as a work of reference for general use.

The classified arrangement in this register of the existing acts will also indicate the probable effect of a similar classification of future acts.

III. Until the revision above mentioned has been completed, and the whole contents of the Statute-book are distributed under proper heads, there will be a risk that any groups of statutes which may be selected for consolidation may ultimately be found to omit some enactments which ought to have been included under the same head, or to include some which ought to have been placed under some other head. We have not, however, thought it necessary to suspend the process of consolidation on this account, because it has appeared to us that there are some groups of statutes which may be ascertained with tolerable accuracy, and must necessarily form separate heads under any arrangement, and which may therefore be usefully consolidated at once. The statutes relating to criminal law, to mercantile law, and to the law of property seem to be distinct groups of this kind, and we have therefore completed the consolidation of a large section of one of those groups, and have made considerable progress with the other two, as we will now proceed to detail.

(1). A consolidation of the general criminal law, so far as relates to indictable offences, was laid on the table of the House of Lords by the Lord Chancellor at the end of the session of 1856, in eight bills, comprising the following subjects:—

1. Offences against the person.
2. Offences against property.
3. Malicious injuries to property.
4. Forgery.
5. Treason and offences against the State.
6. Offences of a public nature.
7. The law of accessories.
8. Criminal procedure.

These bills had been revised and settled with great care by Lord Wensleydale, the late Chief Justice Jervis, Sir Fitzroy Kelly, and Mr. Greaves.

On again revising these bills, with a view to their introduction into Parliament in the present session, we have, at the suggestion of the Lord Chancellor, been led to modify to a certain extent the views which we entertained when we first gave instructions for their preparation.

These bills were originally drawn on the principle that no alteration should be made in the law, and as little as possible in the language of the statutes consolidated; and they were confined to indictable offences, in accordance with the division adopted by the former Criminal-law Commissioners; but it appeared to us, on further consideration, that if the restrictions thus imposed on the draftsmen were relaxed to a moderate extent, the bills would be much more satisfactory.

We would therefore propose that the introduction of these bills, and of all other consolidation bills, should be made an opportunity for effecting some improvements in the law at the same time—not improvements which are the subject of any differences of opinion, or would raise any discussion, but merely remedying such defects as may be said to be accidental, and not owing to any deliberate intention on the part of the Legislature—such as the removal of unnecessary variations between enactments relating to offences of the same nature now existing in consequence of such enactments having been passed at different times or framed by different persons, the supplying of admitted deficiencies, and the correction of admitted inconveniences.

(To be concluded in our next number.)

⁂ In the debate on the proposed consolidation of the Statutes, on the 9th February, 1854, Lord Campbell said, "that the Statutes at Large extended to about fifty volumes folio, but all the Statutes which were usually required by lawyers for reference might be found in three octavo volumes compiled by his learned friend Mr. Welsby. When he (Lord Campbell) was upon the bench he always had this work by him, and no Statutes were ever referred to by the Bar which he could not find in it."

This important Work will be continued annually, by an Edition of the Statutes, arranged on a similar plan, with a full Index, being published shortly after the close of each Session. Edited by E. BEAVAN, Esq. Three Supplements are now ready, containing the Statutes of 1854, price 9*s.* 6*d.*; 1855, price 9*s.* 6*d.*; and 1856, price 6*s.*, sewed.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 5, 1857.

Nothing is better established, by a long series of authorities, than these propositions—that a wife is entitled, both as against her husband and his assignees in bankruptcy or insolvency, or his particular assignee for value, to claim her equity to a settlement out of the capital of her property, which can only be reached by an application to a Court of equity. It is also well established that she is likewise entitled to a settlement or maintenance out of her life interest in equitable property, as against her husband, in case he should desert her, or against his general assignees, in case he should become bankrupt or insolvent.

It has, however, been held, that although a married woman is entitled to a settlement out of capital, as against the particular assignee for value of her husband, she is not entitled to claim such right, where she has only a life interest, if her husband executed the assignment previous either to his bankruptcy or insolvency, or the abandonment of his wife. For instance: suppose a married woman to become entitled to 1000*l.*, which the husband assigned to a person for valuable consideration, but which, in consequence of the trustees not being willing to pay it to the assignee, or in consequence of the fund being in the Court of Chancery, was not attainable without an application to the Court, the wife would be entitled to have a part, or in some cases even the whole, of the fund settled upon her, to the disappointment of the assignee. Suppose, however, that the wife was entitled to a life interest only in the fund of 1000*l.*, although the wife would be entitled to a settlement out of it as against her husband, or his assignees in bankruptcy or insolvency, she could not claim it as against a person to whom an assignment for value had been made, although her husband afterwards became bankrupt or insolvent, or left her in a state of destitution.

Like most of the anomalies of our law, this doctrine appears to have been started by a dictum, and to have been gradually established by decisions leaning upon so dangerous a support, rather than by a rational examination of the principles of equity, or by analogy to cases of undoubted authority. The first case in which this distinction appears to have been suggested is that of Wright v. Morley, (11 Ves. 12): there the husband assigned the dividends in stock vested in trustees, to which his wife was entitled for life, in order to secure an annuity which he had granted. It was contended that an assignment of a life interest to an assignee for value was valid as against her claim for a settlement. It was, however, unnecessary to decide the point, as Sir W. Grant, M. R., was of opinion, assuming the wife to be entitled to a settlement as against the assignee for value, (which point, however, he did not decide), that the amount of the dividends which would remain after providing for the payment of the annuity would be an adequate settlement or maintenance for the wife. His Honor, after referring to the opinion of Lord Alvanley, that there was no difference, with reference to the equity of a married woman to a settlement, between an assignment for valuable consideration and by operation of law, added, however, with respect to the life interest of a married woman, "There is no doubt the husband has a right to deal with it so long as he maintains her; and there is no doubt of his right to make a specific disposition if he maintained her. That leads to the question, whether, in the case of abandonment, by the husband ceasing to maintain his wife, there is an equity for her to have her own life interest laid hold of by this Court, supposing it not reduced into possession by the husband, being still in the hands of trustees. One question is, whether that is settled merely as between the husband and wife, and putting third persons out of consideration? If so, the second is, whether this equity prevails, where, previously to the abandonment, the husband has made an assignment of the wife's interest, or any part of it? That question, so far from being decided, has not even been made the gist of a case. It, therefore, deserves a great deal of consideration. Another point is as to the assignment having taken place when the husband was performing his duty by maintaining his wife, whether the abandonment afterwards shall devest the right which the assignee of the fund had vested in him."

The first reported decision upon the subject appears to have been the case of Elliott v. Cordell, (5 Mad. 149). There a married woman being entitled to a life interest in the dividends of stock vested in trustees, she and her husband assigned her life interest for value to the defendant. The husband afterwards became bankrupt. It was argued that the wife was entitled to a settlement, inasmuch as there was no difference in principle between a gross sum and an interest for life; but Sir J. Leach, V. C., held that the wife was not entitled to a settlement. "I find no authority," he observed, "for the equity claimed by the wife, as against the particular assignee, in the case of an interest given to the wife for her life; and it does not follow as a corollary or consequence from any established doctrine of the Court." And after admitting that in the event of the husband deserting his wife, or becoming bankrupt or insolvent, the Court would give the wife a maintenance out of her life interest, he endeavours to account for the distinction which he considered to exist between the rights of a particular assignee for value and the general assignee of the husband with respect to the life interest of his wife. "When the title of the general assignee," he added, "vests, the incapacity of the husband to maintain the wife has already raised this equity for the wife; but the same principle does not necessarily apply to a particular assignee for a valuable consideration, who purchased this interest when the husband was maintaining the wife, and before circumstances had raised any present equity in this property for the wife, whatever may be the force of general reasoning upon it. If, however, I considered it to be useful that the same rule should be applied to the particular assignee as to the general assignee, (which may be doubted), by declaring this rule, in the absence of all direct authority, and of all authority leading necessarily to the same conclusion, I fear that I should not be administering the actual law of this Court, but I should be making a new law; and I cannot venture to assume such a jurisdiction."

The next reported case on the subject appears to be that of Stanton v. Hall, (2, Russ. & M. 175). There the husband was tenant for life of lands vested in trustees, with a provision that in the event of his bankruptcy or insolvency his wife should have an annuity of 100*l.* during his life. The husband sold and conveyed the whole estate as if he had been the owner in fee-simple, and afterwards took the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors Act. It was held by Lord Brougham, C., that the wife was not entitled to any settlement. "If," said his Lordship, "the question were now for the first time raised, whether Courts of equity had not gone further than principle warranted in allowing the claim against particular assignees in cases where a capital sum was at stake, some doubt might, perhaps, be entertained; but in a case like Elliott v. Cordell, where the question related to a mere life interest, and where, prior to the assignment, there was no failure on the part of the husband to maintain his wife, the Vice-Chancellor (Sir J. Leach) would have gone a great step further had he listened to the argument in favour of the wife's equity." This case clearly recognised the decision of Elliott v. Cordell; but the doubt thrown out by the Lord Chancellor, as to whether the wife's equity to a settlement out of a capital sum might not be defeated by an assignment for value, (a doubt utterly unwarranted by the authorities), shewed that his Lordship's mind was then scarcely familiar with the principles of equity upon this subject, and that a strong bias towards the doctrines of common law would naturally incline him rather to lean upon a decision such as Elliott v. Cordell than to carry those principles out to their legitimate extent.

After a lapse of upwards of twenty years the question was again mooted in the recent case of Tidd v. Lister, (10 Hare, 140); and there Sir G. J. Turner, V.C., followed the cases of Elliott v. Cordell and Stanton v. Hall; and his decision was, on appeal, affirmed by Lord Cranworth, C., (3 De G., Mac., & G. 857). After these decisions the question may perhaps be considered at rest, though it is one well deserving the attentive consideration of the highest appellate tribunal. Be this as it may, it will not be altogether useless to examine the reasoning upon which the distinction between the assignment of a life interest and of a capital fund of the wife, with reference to her claim to a settlement, are supposed to rest, and which Sir G. J. Turner, V. C., said "cannot be disregarded."

That learned judge first observes, (see 10 Hare, 152), that "in cases where the wife takes an absolute interest, the provision is for herself and her children. She cannot claim it for herself alone. In cases where the wife takes a life interest, the provision is for her separate benefit, independently of the children—a distinction pointed out by Sir W. Grant in Wright v. Morley." The Lord Chancellor also makes similar remarks as to the children in such a case not being included in the provision made for the wife. (See 3 De G., Mac., & G. 869). Now, it is true, that where the wife has an absolute interest, if she requires a settlement to be made, her children are always provided for; but that is not the case where the wife seeks a maintenance out of her life income, for it is too well established to render it necessary to quote authorities, that where a married woman has been either deserted by her husband, or he has become bankrupt or insolvent, maintenance or a settlement will be allowed to or made upon her out of a life interest, without considering her children. A provision for the children, therefore, does not appear to be essential where the wife seeks for maintenance or a settlement out of her income. His Honor then takes this distinction—that "in cases where the wife takes an absolute interest, her right to a provision for herself and her children is independent of the acts and conduct of her husband; in cases where she takes a life interest only, her right to a provision for herself arises from the non-fulfilment by him of his obligations, and is wholly dependent upon his acts and conduct."

Now, this is not strictly accurate, for in many cases the equity of a wife to a settlement may depend upon the acts of her husband; for instance, if he has made a sufficient settlement upon her, she cannot claim a settlement even out of capital; and it is clear that the amount to be settled upon her out of capital may very materially depend upon the acts and conduct of her husband. It seems, moreover, to us to be very doubtful, even in the case of a capital fund, where the husband is maintaining the wife, and is not either bankrupt or insolvent, whether the Court would, upon the husband declining to execute a settlement, take away the income of it from him, although it would secure the fund so as to give the wife the chance of taking it by survivorship. His Honor next observes, that "in the cases, too, where the wife takes an absolute interest, the purchaser takes subject to a well-known and settled equity; but where the wife takes for life only, the equity by which it is said the purchaser must be bound may not exist at the time of the purchase, and, depending as it does on the conduct of the husband, may never come into existence; and in this respect," his Honor adds, "there is a great distinction between the particular assignee for value and the general assignee; for in the case of the general assignee the very bankruptcy or insolvency on which his title is founded creates the right against him."

Assuming that these distinctions do exist to the extent laid down by the learned judge, the real question after all is, are they material to the question at issue? Assuming that it is uncertain whether the conduct of the husband may ever give rise to the equity of the wife—that is to say, assuming that at the time when he assigns the income of his wife's life interest it is uncertain whether he will ever desert her, or become bankrupt or insolvent, (events which it is admitted, as against the husband or his general assignees, would give good grounds for her claim to maintenance or a settlement), is not the real question upon which everything turns this—whether the husband can convey a better title to an assignee for value than he has himself? We think, with Sir W. Grant, M. R., in Wright v. Morley, (11 Ves. 17), that there is "great weight" in what Lord Alvanley said upon this subject in Macaulay v. Philips, (4 Ves. 19), viz. that "it would be whimsical that the assignment by the husband for valuable consideration should put that assignee in equity in a better situation than the husband himself is at law. The guard of this Court upon the wife's interest would be very singular if the husband, not being entitled at law, might assign it for valuable consideration to another person, who would be entitled in equity."

This reasoning of Lord Alvanley, although he was then speaking with reference to the capital of the wife, is precisely applicable to the question now under consideration; and if it were carried into effect, the assignee for value would take what the husband is entitled to in the life interest of the wife, and no more; and consequently the wife's right to a maintenance or settlement thereout would arise when the husband either deserted or shewed his inability to maintain her, by becoming either bankrupt or insolvent.

His Honor lastly considers the inconveniences which would ensue if the Court gave the wife a maintenance out of her life interest as against an assignee for value. "Purchasers," he says, "would become involved in inquiries into the relations between husband and wife, the extent of their property, and their other means of maintenance; and the life interests of married women would become incapable of being dealt with, whatever might be the exigencies of the case." This may be all true; but does not the same objections, either wholly or to a great extent, apply to the alienation of the capital of the wife? And yet the Court has never allowed them to deter it from making a settlement upon the wife out of her capital, though assigned for value.

In truth, such decisions as Elliott v. Cordell, Stanton v. Hall, and Tidd v. Lister cannot be supported upon principle; an attempt to do so will but result in pointing out here and there a distinction without a difference, barely concealed by semi-transparent fallacies. When Lord Brougham in Stanton v. Hall was inclined to doubt whether a married woman was entitled to a settlement out of her capital as against an assignee for value, although he had no authority for the doubt, he had at any rate, in throwing it out, the merit of consistency.

Considering the time which has elapsed since Elliott v. Cordell and Stanton v. Hall were decided, it would perhaps be, as the Lord Chancellor observes in Tidd v. Lister, (3 De G., Mac., & G. 871), "very inexpedient now to attempt to disturb them; but we cannot be surprised, that with reference to the grounds for the distinction in principle between the mode of dealing with the purchaser of a wife's life interest and the purchaser of her absolute interest, his Lordship observes, "That they are altogether satisfactory to my mind I am not prepared to say."

It is a well-established rule, that no appeal lies from a magistrate's decision unless it is expressly given by statute. The consequence has been, that in very many cases no right of appeal has existed, although the adjudication may have been as important in its nature and its results as in other instances from which the party dissatisfied had the power of appealing to the court of quarter sessions. This anomaly was not remedied by Jervis's Act, (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43), although it professed to consolidate and render uniform the procedure which relates to summary convictions and orders; but by the act which was passed for Ireland two years later, and which had the same general object in view, an appeal to the next quarter sessions was given in all cases of summary jurisdiction in Ireland, where the fine imposed exceeded 20*s*., or the term of imprisonment exceeded one month. (14 & 15 Vict. c. 93, s. 24). Uniformity, however, upon this subject, so far as points of law are concerned, has now been introduced into England and Ireland* by a statute which has just received the royal assent, (20 & 21 Vict. c. 43), and which is likely to have an extensive as well as an important operation. Its general effect is to allow an appeal against any conviction or order of magistrates to one of the superior courts of common law, upon the ground that it is erroneous in point of law. The magistrates, it is true, may refuse to allow the appeal, (except where the application is made under the Attorney-General's direction), if they are of opinion that the application is merely frivolous; but even then the appellant may apply to the Court of Queen's Bench for a rule calling upon them to shew cause why the appeal should not lie. The form of the appeal is to be by special case, which is to be stated and signed by the justices, provided the application for that purpose is made to them in writing, and security to prosecute &c. given within three days of their decision. The appellant on receiving the case is to give a copy thereof, and notice of appeal, to the respondent, and is to transmit the case itself (without certiorari) to the superior court within three days after he, the appellant, has received it. The superior court, or a judge at chambers, is to decide the case, having power over the costs, and their decision is to be enforced by the magistrates. The act is already in force, but the Courts are empowered to make rules for regulating procedure under it.

It will be observed that the statute does not provide for appeals on matters of fact: these, therefore, remain almost as before, and will lie only where expressly allowed by statute, and then to quarter sessions. The only alteration made as to such appeals is, that they will be taken to have been abandoned when an appeal on a point of law is made under this statute.

THE THIRD REPORT OF THE STATUTE-LAW COMMISSIONERS.

(Concluded from p. 352).

We have also come to the conclusion that such other offences, though not indictable offences, as are now found in the Consolidation Acts of 1827, and other existing statutes in connexion with indictable offences, and also those offences which have been made originally punishable on summary conviction, with a provision that a second or third offence shall be felony or misdemeanour, should be introduced into these bills, so as to avoid as much as possible the inconvenience of breaking up a statute, and leaving parts of it in force, which would increase, instead of diminishing, the complexity of the statute law.

We may observe that the introduction of such alterations and additions would be in exact accordance with the recommendations made in 1854 by the select committee of the House of Lords on the bills of the Criminal-law Commission, which we add in the Appendix to this our Report.

We have, therefore, caused a revision of the criminal law bills to be commenced in accordance with the views above indicated. The revised bills will be accompanied by a statement shewing the alterations made, and they will shortly be ready to be submitted to Parliament.

In the course of this revision it has appeared to us that the law on certain special subjects, which had been included in the general bills, would be more conveniently placed apart; we have therefore extracted and arranged in separate bills the game laws, the laws relating to coin, to libel, and to perjury. Other special branches of the criminal law, such as offences relating to the army and navy, to the post-office, to the customs, and other public departments, had been omitted in the first instance, and still remain to be made the subject of separate consolidations.

We have also given instructions for the preparation of a bill to consolidate the general statute law relating to the procedure before magistrates in cases of summary conviction.

The eight criminal law bills originally prepared related to England only; but as we conceived it to be very desirable, if possible, that the law of England and Ireland should be included in the same bills, they were altered, under the direction of the Attorney-General for Ireland, so as to include the statute law of Ireland also. The view, however, which we thus obtained of the extent of the difference between the laws of the two countries led us to the conclusion, that in a consolidation in which no material alterations of the law were to be introduced, it would not be practicable to frame a bill so as to include the criminal law of the two countries in a satisfactory manner; and though the modification of our plan above spoken of has led to some change of our views in some instances, we still think that generally it would be best that the bills should not, in the first instance, be made to apply to Ireland, and that the law of Ireland should be subsequently consolidated in separate bills. We would, however, express our hope that the consideration of the bills, when framed on this principle, may induce the Legislature to assimilate the laws of the two countries in all respects, except in the few cases in which substantial reasons can be assigned for the existing difference between them.

(2.) Mercantile Law.—Under this head we have given instructions for the preparation of bills on the following subjects:—

Bills of exchange and promissory notes.
Factors, agents, and mercantile contracts.
Joint-stock companies and partnership.
Merchant ships and shipping.
Bankers and banking.
Copyright.
Patents.
Carriers.
Pawnbrokers.
Innkeepers and victuallers.
Harbours, rivers, canals.

Most of these have been delivered to us by the draftsmen, and are now under consideration; the remainder are in a forward state. The bill on bills of exchange and promissory notes is that mentioned in our First Report, as we have already explained.

(3.) Law of Property.—Under this head we have caused bills to be prepared embracing the following subjects:—

Landlord and tenant.
Alienation—Dispositions by tenants in tail and married women—Improvement of lands. (Five bills).
Fraudulent assurances.
Mortgage and registration of judgments. (Two bills).
Devise and testament. (Two bills).
Escheat, tenure, and trusts estates. (Five bills).
Mortmain.
Joint tenancy and partition.
Attornment—Commons (three bills)—Copyhold—Curtesy—Descent—Dow—Gavelkind—Maintenance—Waste.
Ecclesiastical and collegiate leases.

The whole of these have been delivered to us by the draftsmen. The first and last of them are the bills referred to in our First Report, as already explained.

In addition to these, we have also caused to be prepared bills to consolidate the law relating to aliens and denizens, the statutes of limitation and prescription, the statutes relating to bridges, the statutes rendering written documents necessary in certain cases, the marriage acts, the statutes regulating weights and measures, and those relating to libel; and a gentleman is engaged, under the direction of the Attorney-General, in consolidating the law relating to insurance.

Mr. Tapping has also obligingly presented us with a bill which he has prepared to consolidate and amend the Factory Acts; and Mr. Edward Cooke has also presented to us a bill to consolidate and amend the statutes relating to insolvency.

In laying down rules for the consolidation of the statute law, we have felt it impossible to adopt one universal principle. It will be observed that our task is to consolidate the existing law, not to frame a code of general law founded on that which now exists; nor, in fact, to make a digest of the statute law, with additions or alterations; we therefore find it necessary to treat the different classes of statutes according to particular circumstances. Thus many statutes of ancient date, which have been through a course of ages expounded by the Courts, must now be regarded rather as the basis than as the whole structure of the existing law, and can hardly be made the subject of simple consolidation; though, if a digest of the existing law were to be made, their effect, coupled with the judicial expositions which they have from time to time received, might of course be embodied. In the class of real property statutes, Magna Charta, the Statute Quia Emptores, and the Statute of Uses may be taken as instances of the kind referred to; and we propose that these should, without enactment, be merely classified and reprinted, or, if it should be considered expedient to enact a classified arrangement of the law, they might be declared to be law, in the manner which we have adopted with regard to the Statute of Treasons in the Criminal Law Bill relating to that subject.

There is another class of statutes which it would not be possible to consolidate in the mere terms of the existing enactments; we allude to those which consist of a series of fragmentary alterations of or additions to the common law; such, for instance, as those which have been passed to regulate the relations of landlord and tenant. We have caused a bill on that subject to be prepared; but the effect of so incoherent a collection of exceptions without the rules, and explanations or additions without the thing explained or added to, part in antiquated and part in modern language, is certainly not satisfactory; and it appears to us at least doubtful whether, in cases of this kind, anything like a complete and intelligible enactment can be produced unless we rewrite the law, availing ourselves occasionally of our power to embody the common law.

With regard to another class, consisting of recent statutes which stand alone, or which have been only slightly modified by subsequent amending acts, a consideration of the bills which have been prepared has led us to the conclusion that it is not necessary with these to go through the form of repeal and re-enactment, unless, indeed, it should ultimately be determined to rewrite this class of statutes, for the purpose of adopting any amendments, or supplying any deficiencies discovered in them in the course of their practical application. As examples of this class we may mention the Statute of Wills of 1837, and the act of 1833 to abolish fines and recoveries, and to substitute simpler modes of assurance. One section only (the 9th) of the former act has been modified by a subsequent short act, the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 24; and the only statutory additions to the long and elaborate Fines and Recoveries Act with which we are acquainted are, an enactment (probably superfluous) that it shall extend to Berwick, (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 103, s. 6); a provision that judges of county courts may take acknowledgments of married women under the 79th section, (19 & 20 Vict. c. 108, s. 73); the substitution of the Master of the Rolls and the Vice-Chancellors for Masters in Chancery, for the purposes of the same section, by the effect of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80, s. 36; and the short act, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 75, making an alteration in the 81st section.

It appears to us that the inconveniences which must always accompany any change, even in the language and form of the law, would exceed any advantages which might result from the incorporation of such slight alterations in cases of this kind; and we therefore consider that nothing should be done with statutes of the class now under consideration, beyond reprinting them in their most suitable places, in any classified edition of the statutes, or at most re-enacting them in a declaratory way, if such a course is thought advisable.

Omitting, for the reasons above stated, the three classes of statutes to which we have referred, there still remains a large body of statutes to which the process of consolidation, as that term is ordinarily understood, may be applied with advantage, and without more difficulty than must accompany any work which requires skill, accuracy, and experience—such as many of the groups of statutes relating to mercantile law, and generally those branches of the law which are wholly or chiefly based on statutory enactments.

It appears, then, that when the whole existing general statute law has been ascertained and arranged, by means of the classification and register already mentioned, every enactment will fall under one of four classes, namely—

1. Historical statutes.
2. Enactments which require to be rewritten.
3. Statutes standing alone, and not requiring consolidation.
4. Statutes requiring consolidation.

Supposing such an arrangement, with re-enactments, rewritings, and consolidation (where required), to have been effected, a complete body of the existing statute law, forming the permanent rule of civil conduct, would have been produced, so far as relates to the future; but, in addition to these, it must be borne in mind that there will be a large class of statutes, which, though not relating to future transactions, must long continue to be referred to, and, in a qualified sense, to be in force with respect to questions of title, and for many incidental purposes. The Statute of Frauds, for instance, notwithstanding the Wills Act of 1837, must still be the rule for wills made before 1838; and the present Wills Act, as modified by Lord St. Leonards' Act of 1852, must in like manner remain the rule for wills made between 1838 and the passing of any new law on the subject; and it would therefore be necessary, under any circumstances, if an edition of the statutes adapted to the wants of the public is to be produced, to add, in a supplement or otherwise, the laws of this description.

The foregoing observations have been framed with more particular reference to the class of statutes which affect real property, which afford, perhaps, the most salient examples of the various difficulties which surround the work of consolidation. There are many branches of the law, especially mercantile law, in which few or none of them occur.

We are well aware of the great difficulties which surround the task confided to us—difficulties which no one can appreciate who has not had personal experience of them; but we trust that we may at least claim the credit of having actually commenced, and even made an important progress in, a work which others have only recommended.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 12, 1857.

THE result of many hot conflicts lies before us in the shape of "An Act to amend the Law relating to Divorce and Matrimonial Causes in England," (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85). Who, ignorant of legislative history during the past session, regarding the placid type, and reading the cold formula, "whereas it is expedient to amend the law," could find trace of stout contests and bitter words? The battle-field has been ploughed and sown anew, and here we have only the harvest—richer, perhaps, for the blood that was shed upon its soil. The produce in this instance, unlike that of many greater battles, is full of promise, and will confer substantial benefit upon the public. It is true that the main object proposed by the measure was simply a transfer of the jurisdiction in matters matrimonial from the House of Lords and Ecclesiastical Courts to a special tribunal. But this in itself involves important consequences, for it tends to distribute justice equally among all classes, and that with reference to a subject of peculiar interest to the community at large. The average expense of obtaining a divorce under the former system is stated by Mr. Shelford to have been 700*l.*; but under the new procedure we should think it can scarcely exceed 100*l.*, unless the case is carried on appeal to the House of Lords. It is also to be observed that the passing of this statute has the effect of making that law which hitherto has been in the nature of a privilege, dependent upon a somewhat capricious exercise of jurisdiction by the House of Lords. Judicial is substituted for legislative divorce, and one statute henceforth regulates all divorces, instead of a separate statute being required for each case. It is now expressly declared by law that marriage is dissoluble for adultery, and that the parties divorced may marry again; and the grounds upon which an injured wife may obtain a rescission of the marriage contract are at length clearly defined. Indeed, one of the most praiseworthy features in the act is its tendency in some measure to do justice to women, whose rights have been generally ignored in the measures of the British Legislature. It is also satisfactory to find that the action of crim. con. will be abolished when this statute comes into operation; and although the "scandal" of it cannot be said even then to be wholly at an end, inasmuch as the husband may still sue the adulterer for damages in "the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes," yet the damages will not necessarily go into the husband's pocket, as the Court has power to deal with them for the benefit of the children or the maintenance of the wife. If we were asked to point out the objectionable part of the act, we should place our finger on that clause which empowers clergymen to refuse to solemnise the marriage of a person whose former marriage has been dissolved on the ground of his or her adultery, and also on the clause which allows an appeal from the Divorce Court to the House of Lords. The arguments pro and con relating to the exemption of clergymen from the operation of the act have been so recently before the public that it is unnecessary here to repeat them; and with regard to the appeal to the House of Lords, we may pray in aid those reasons which have recently been laid before our readers against the exercise of judicial jurisdiction by that tribunal. We should have thought it advisable not to allow any appeal from a decision of the full Court of Divorce; but if allowed, it should, in our opinion, be to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

With these preparatory remarks we proceed to analyse the measure itself, and will for that purpose divide it into three parts, treating first of the constitution of the new court; secondly, of its jurisdiction, and the consequences of its exercise; and, thirdly, of the procedure in such court. We should, however, mention, by way of preliminary observation, that the act cannot come into force sooner than the 1st January, 1858, and that the period of its operation, whether on that or a subsequent day, is to be fixed by an Order in Council made one month previously to the day appointed. (Sect. 1).

The Court is to be styled "The Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes." The judge of the Court of Probate is to be the "Judge Ordinary;" its other judges will be the Lord Chancellor and the chief and senior puisne judges of each of the three superior common-law courts. The Judge Ordinary may act alone in all cases, except petitions for dissolving or annulling marriage, and applications for new trials of questions or issues before a jury, which are to be determined by three or more of the judges, and except also bills of exception, special verdicts, and special cases, which are to be determined by the full Court.

During the temporary absence of the Judge Ordinary, the judge of the Admiralty Court, or a common-law or equity judge, may be appointed to act in his stead. The Court is to sit at such place as may be appointed by Order in Council; it will be a court of record, having a seal of its own, and its decrees and orders, or copies thereof, sealed with such seal, will be receivable in evidence. The registrars and other officers of the principal registry of the Court of Probate are to attend its sittings. Advocates or proctors of any ecclesiastical court in England, and all barristers, attornies, and solicitors entitled to practise in the superior courts at Westminster, may practise in it. (Sects. 6, 8, 9, 15, and 39).

Further than this, a judge of assize, at the assizes for the county in which the husband and wife reside or last resided together, may hear and determine applications for restitution of conjugal rights or for judicial separation, and, where the application is by the wife, may make an order for alimony. He may refer the application to a Queen's counsel or serjeant named in the commission; and not only the Divorce Court, but also justices of the peace, have power to act for the protection of a woman's earnings or property, where she has been deserted by her husband. (Sects. 17, 20, and 21).

The Courts of appellate jurisdiction are, the Judge Ordinary from the judge of assize, the full Court from the Judge Ordinary when acting alone, and in the one case of petitions for dissolution of marriage, the House of Lords from the full Court. (Sects. 20, 55, and 56).

The jurisdiction now vested in Ecclesiastical Courts in respect of divorces à mensâ et thoro, suits of nullity of marriage, of jactitation of marriage, for restitution of conjugal rights, and in all matters matrimonial, except as to the granting of marriage licenses, is to be transferred to the new Court. A decree for judicial separation is substituted for the divorce à mensâ et thoro, and may be obtained either by the husband or wife, on the ground of adultery, or cruelty, or desertion without cause for two years and upwards. The wife in such case, from the date of the decree, and while the separation continues, is to be considered as a feme sole with respect to property, contracts, wrongs and injuries, and suing and being sued; but where alimony has been decreed, and not duly paid, the husband will be liable for necessaries supplied to her. Notwithstanding the separation, she will still be capable of exercising any joint power given to herself and her husband.

Divorces à vinculo may also be granted by the new Court to the husband for adultery of the wife, and to the wife for any of the following offences by the husband—incestuous adultery, bigamy with adultery, adultery coupled with such cruelty as without adultery would have entitled her to a divorce à mensâ et thoro*, adultery coupled with desertion for two years or upwards, rape, sodomy, or bestiality. The words "incestuous adultery" mean adultery committed with a woman with whom the husband, if single, could not lawfully contract marriage, by reason of her being within the prohibited degrees of consanguinity or affinity; and the offence of bigamy under the statute will be complete whether committed in the Queen's dominions or elsewhere. The petition for dissolution is to be dismissed if the Court is of opinion that the petitioner has been accessory to or conniving at the adultery, or has condoned it, or is acting in collusion with the respondent. The Court also has a discretion as to dissolving the marriage tie, if it find that the petitioner has during the marriage been guilty of adultery, or of unreasonable delay in presenting or prosecuting the petition, or of cruelty towards the other party to the marriage, or of having, without reasonable excuse, deserted or wilfully separated himself or herself from the other party before the adultery complained of, or of such wilful neglect or misconduct as has conduced to the adultery. Power is given to decree alimony to the wife, and to have the same secured by deed; and in case of her adultery a settlement may be ordered of her property, or part of it, for the benefit of her husband and children. No action will be maintainable for criminal conversation, but damages may be claimed by a husband from the adulterer, either in a separate petition or in a petition for dissolution of marriage, or for judicial separation; they are to be ascertained by the verdict of a jury, and may be applied by the Court for the benefit of the children or the maintenance of the wife. The adulterer, when made co-respondent to any petition presented by a husband, may be ordered to pay the whole or any part of the costs. The Court also has power, on petition for dissolution or nullity of marriage, or for judicial separation, to provide for the custody, maintenance, and education of the children, and may direct proceedings to be taken for placing them under the protection of the Court of Chancery.

* i. e. Such cruelty as causes danger to life or health. Proof must be given of grounds for reasonable apprehension of bodily hurt. (Per Lord Stowell in Evans v. Evans, 1 Hagg. Cons. 39, 40).

The parties divorced à vinculo may marry again after the time for appeal has elapsed, or after an unsuccessful appeal; but no clergyman of the Established Church is bound to solemnise the marriage of any person who has been divorced for her or his adultery; such clergyman, however, is to permit the use of his church for that purpose to any other clergyman entitled to officiate in the diocese. (Sects. 2, 6, 7, 16, 26, 30, 31—35, 45, and 57—59).

With regard to the procedure of the Court, the most important section is the 22nd, whereby it is enacted, that "in all suits and proceedings, other than proceedings to dissolve any marriage, the Court shall proceed and act and give relief on principles and rules which in the opinion of the said Court shall be, as nearly as may be, conformable to the principles and rules on which the Ecclesiastical Courts have heretofore acted and given relief, but subject to the provisions herein contained, and to the rules and orders under this act."

If, however, damages be sought against the adulterer, the claim in that respect is to be heard and tried on the same principles, in the same manner, and subject to the same or like rules as prevail in the trial of actions for crim. con. (Sect. 33).

The application for relief to the court or a judge of assize must in all cases be by petition, which is to be served on the party to be affected by it, in such manner as the Court may by any general or special order direct, and for that purpose the Court will have all the powers conferred by any statute on the Court of Chancery. The Court may, however, dispense with such service altogether. If damages be sought from the alleged adulterer, the petition is to be served on him and the wife, unless the Court dispense with such service, or direct some other to be substituted. If a decree of nullity or dissolution of marriage, or of judicial separation, in a suit of jactitation of marriage, be sought, an affidavit must be filed verifying the petition, so far as the applicant can do so, and stating that there is not any collusion or connivance between the deponent and the other party to the marriage. (Sects. 33, 41, and 42).

The alleged adulterer is to be made a co-respondent to a petition presented by a husband for dissolution of marriage, unless otherwise ordered by the Court on special grounds; and on like petition by the wife the Court may direct that the person with whom the husband is alleged to have committed adultery shall be made a respondent. (Sect. 28).

On petitions for dissolution of marriage, the parties, or any of them, may insist upon contested matters of fact being tried by a jury, and if damages are sought, they are always to be ascertained by a jury, but in other cases it is in the discretion of the Court whether questions of fact shall or shall not be determined by a jury. Issues may also be directed by the Court to be tried in any court of common law. Upon the trial, under the act, of any question of fact by a jury, or of any issue, a bill of exceptions may be tendered, and a general or special verdict, or a verdict subject to a special case, may be given; and where the trial has not been had before the new Court, they are to be returned into it without any writ of error or other writ, and the matter of law involved therein is to be determined by the full Court. (Sects. 28, 33, 36, 39, and 40).

Witnesses are to be sworn and examined orally in open court, but parties may verify their respective cases, in whole or in part, by affidavit, and be cross-examined and re-examined thereon orally in open court. The attendance of the petitioner may be ordered, and his examination or cross-examination on oath may be permitted at the hearing, but he will not be bound to answer any question tending to shew that he has been guilty of adultery. The rules of evidence observed in the common-law courts are to be followed by the Court in the trial of all questions of fact. Provision is made for enforcing the attendance of witnesses, and for their examination when abroad or unable to attend. The hearing of the case may be adjourned, and further evidence thereon required. (Sects. 43 and 46—50).

The Court, and the House of Lords on appeal, have a general power over the costs of the proceedings, but there is not to be any appeal on the subject of costs only. (Sect. 51).

The time for appealing from the Judge Ordinary to the full Court is three calendar months. A like period is named for the appeal from the full Court to the House of Lords, on decrees for dissolving marriage; but if Parliament be not then sitting, the appeal must be within fourteen days next after its meeting. (Sects. 55 and 56).

The fees payable under the act (except on applications to a judge of assize) are to be collected by stamps. Compensation is awarded to proctors, and the salary of the Judge Ordinary is fixed. (Sects. 19, 60, 64, and 65).

The Secretary of State is empowered to order all proceedings relating to marriages, except marriage licenses, to be transmitted from Ecclesiastical Courts, and provision is made as to decrees made or suits now pending in such courts. (Sects. 3—5, and 66).

15 & 16 VICT. c. 86, s. 42, r. 9.

There seems to have been some conflict of opinion among the different equity judges as to the practice of putting into execution sect. 42 of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, the 9th rule of which is, "That in all suits concerning real or personal estate which is vested in trustees under a will, settlement, or otherwise, such trustees shall represent the persons beneficially interested under the trust, in the same manner and to the same extent as the executors or administrators in suits concerning personal estate represent the persons beneficially interested in such personal estate; and in such cases it shall not be necessary to make the persons beneficially interested under the trust parties to the suit; but the Court may, upon consideration of the matter on the hearing, if it think fit, order such persons, or any of them, to be made parties." One of the first cases that came under this section was a foreclosure claim filed by the first mortgagee against the mortgagor and second mortgagee; and the question arose, whether, inasmuch as the second mortgagee was merely a trustee under a settlement, the persons interested under such settlement ought to be made parties. This case (Goldsmith v. Stonehewer, 9 Hare, App., xxxviii; S. C., 17 Jur., part 1, p. 199) came before Sir G. J. Turner, V. C., and that learned judge, after having noticed the circumstances of the case, is reported to have said, "If the mortgage had been made to the party, or had become vested in him as executor, it would be sufficient to make him defendant, without any of the persons beneficially interested. . . . There is this difference between the case of an executor and that of a trustee, that the executor has the control over the whole estate of the testator, whilst the power of the trustee is limited to the particular fund which is the subject of the trust, and he has not necessarily control over any other fund." And his Honor concluded by consenting to make the order upon having the adult cestuis que trust made parties. A similar distinction was taken in the two cases of Hanman v. Riley (9

Hare, App., xl) and Sale v. Kitson, (3 De G., Mac., & G. 119), where it was held, that all the persons having control over the property (in the latter case the devisees in trust and the executors of the mortgagor) being before the Court, the persons beneficially interested need not be made parties. In Fowler v. Bayldon (9 Hare, App., lxxix) this principle was held to extend not only to administration suits, but all other suits where the interest of the cestui que trust was represented by, or the power vested in, trustees. (See Swallow v. Binns, 17 Jur., part 1, p. 295; Young v. Ward, 10 Hare, App., lviii; and Stansfield v. Hobson, 16 Beav. 189). In Shaw v. Hardingham, (Weekly Rep., 1854, p. 657), the Master of the Rolls allowed the executors with a power of sale under the will of mortgagors, and the tenant for life, to represent the persons beneficially interested in remainder, although there was no devise to the executors, and therefore it was difficult to understand how any estate could be vested in them so as to bring it under the words of the act. In Inder v. Morris (1 Sm. & G. 503) and Cropper v. Mellersh, (1 Jur., N.S., part 1, p. 299; S. C., 24 L. J., Ch., 430), Sir J. Stuart, V. C., was of opinion that the proper course, notwithstanding this 9th rule of the section, was to make the persons beneficially interested parties to the suit. In Cropper v. Mellersh the trustees (as appears from the report of the case in the Law Journal) were also executors. The cases of Sale v. Kitson and Hanman v. Riley were brought before the notice of the Court, and from the report of the case there does not seem to be any reason why the rule laid down in those cases should not be also applicable to that case.

In a late case before Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., (Wilkins v. Reeves, 24 Law T. 337), the same question arose in a foreclosure suit, and his Honor, in deciding that the surviving devisee in trust and executor of the mortgagor sufficiently represented the persons in the equity of redemption, is reported to have said, with reference to the case of Cropper v. Mellersh, "that the Legislature had directed that trustees should represent the estate, and the remarks of the learned judge in that case went to the very root of the enactment in question." The general practice of the Courts is to act in conformity with the principle laid down in the above cases of Sale v. Kitson and Hanman v. Riley, viz. that wherever you have some of the persons before the Court who may have control over the property sought to be affected by the suit, that is considered a sufficient representation under this section.

JUDICIAL STATISTICS.

A BLUE BOOK (one of the light-coloured species) of 100 pages contains some statistics relative to criminal justice for the year 1856. The "Home Office Statistics of Criminal Justice" have been compiled, so far as practicable, to comprise the enlarged amount of information which Secretary Sir G. Grey has desired in future to be prepared annually in this department. The book under our notice at present forms part 1, and it is proposed that the statistics of civil and commercial justice shall form part 2. The statistics of "criminal justice" comprise, under three separate heads, but with conformity of arrangement, police, criminal justice, and prisons; and by combining this information in one report much useless and cumbersome repetition will be avoided, and the matter be rendered more readily accessible, both by its more simple and uniform arrangement, and by its collection and annual publication in one comprehensive record. The statistics thus supplied give the following information:—It appears, under the head of "police," that there were 22,221 inquests in the year 1856 in England and Wales—15,282 on males, and 6,939 on females. The per centage of the deaths thus inquired into was as follows:—Murder 0·9, manslaughter 1·2, suicide 5·9, accidental death 43·8, injuries (causes unknown) 1·9, found dead 14·3, and natural deaths 32 per cent. Of this very large number of cases only 476 were of a class necessarily inducing criminal prosecutions; but the open cases of injuries, causes unknown, would seem to require much more extensive inquiries by coroners. 4120 inquests were held on infants, 3875 on children, 11,247 on adults, and 2675 on aged and infirm persons. The total amount of the expense of these inquests last year was 68,439*l.* —an average of 3*l.* 1*s.* 7*d.* for each case. Under the head of "criminal proceedings" it is stated that the commitments for trial of 1856 shew an unprecedented decrease—a result partly attributable to the extended summary jurisdiction of justices. The decrease is equivalent to 6535 persons, or 25·1 per cent., following the large decrease of 11·5 per cent. in 1855. This decrease extended to every county. As regards the nature of the offences, it appears that in cases of offences against the person (including rape and attempts to ravish) the numbers are nearly stationary; stabbing, wounding, and unnatural crimes exhibit the largest decrease. In class 2, "offences against property with violence," the most marked increase appears, amounting to 23·7 per cent. in burglary and shopbreaking. The great decrease of 33·7 per cent. is recorded under the head of "offences against property without violence." Larceny, embezzlement, and sheep-stealing have decreased, while cattle-stealing, horse-stealing, and frauds have increased. There is a decrease of 24 per cent. in "malicious offences against property," and one of 2 per cent. in "forgery and currency offences." An unusual number of coiners have been convicted. There were 19,437 commitments for trial in 1856—9693 to county quarter sessions, 2008 to the Middlesex Sessions, 2889 to borough quarter sessions, 3787 to circuit assize courts, and 1060 to the Central Criminal Court. Of the persons thus committed to gaol for trial, 4672 were acquitted, 31 found insane, and 14,734 convicted; of whom 69 were condemned to death, 273 to transportation, 2158 to penal servitude, 12,107 to imprisonment, and 127 to be fined or whipped. The capital sentences last year exhibit a large increase, while the sentences to transportation declined by 15·5 per cent. The executions of last year were double the usual average, including four of foreigners. The proportion of female commitments, which has shewn a marked increase of late years, suddenly decreased in 1856—a phenomenon attributable to the operation of the Criminal Justice Act in cases of larceny. The grand total cost of the prosecutions last year was 194,912*l.*—viz. 173,246*l.* on indictment, and 21,666*l.* on summary proceedings. Under the head of "prisons," it is shewn that the total committals to prison last year exhibited an increase of 2·9 per cent., but the result is less unfavourable on analysing the commitments. The relative criminality of the different counties is exhibited by a table, it appearing that the most criminal counties are Middlesex, Lancaster, and Surrey; and the least criminal, the Welsh counties generally, Norfolk, Lincoln, Derby, Suffolk, and Cambridge. One in every 3·6 of the persons committed in 1856 (132,689 in all) is known to have been a previous offender; and among these relapsed culprits, or, as the French criminal statisticians call them, récidives, the females greatly preponderate. It is an important fact that no less than 11,808 males and 2173 females were committed to gaol, and subject to prison discipline, who were under 16 years of age; nay, 1990 under 12 years of age! Of the numbers under 16, only 272 males and 25 females have been removed to the reformatory schools. The proportion of commitments was—under 21 years, 34·2 per cent.; between 21 and 30 years, 29·4 per cent.; and 30 years and upwards, 36·4 per cent. Of those committed 33·1 were utterly illiterate, 53·8 could read, or read imperfectly, 5·4 could do so well, and 0·3 were of superior instruction. The last class is on the increase, probably owing to the general diffusion of education. The return of the occupation of the committed culprits proves the rule, that the untaught, untrained, and unskilled form the great mass of the criminal population. Above one-half have no occupation whatever, or are classed as labourers, charwomen, and needleworkers. The proportion of mechanics and skilled labourers is only 21·7 per cent., and that of all persons raised above the mere artisan class only 3·8 per cent. The total cost of prisons amounted to 515,917*l*., the annual charge of each prisoner being 29*l*. 1*s*. 2*d*., which is pretty nearly the same as in 1847. Of the expense last year, 24,626*l*. was supplied from prison receipts, (prisoners' labour, &c.), 380,360*l*. from local funds and rates, and 110,929*l*. from public revenues. 2892 prisoners were let loose in the year 1856 on tickets of leave, and 88 on pardon; 113 died, 2 committed suicide, and 11 escaped. The cases of sickness were numerous. Such is the substance of the report on judicial statistics. —Times.

Legal Status of an Englishman in France.—With reference to a case—that of Parkinson v. Bedenc—which has lately come before the civil tribunal at Paris, the plaintiff's solicitor, Mr. Margary, addresses to Galignani's Messenger the following general statement of the existing law:—"Great facilities are given by the law of France for the arrest of a foreigner when the creditor is a Frenchman, and many an unfortunate Englishman has been incarcerated upon overdue bills of exchange (often obtained from him fraudulently) indorsed to a Frenchman. As, however, in the majority of cases, the party is not a bonâ fide holder for valuable consideration, but merely a man of straw, who lends his name for the occasion, (technically called a prête-nom), the debtor generally succeeds in obtaining his liberation on shewing to the Court the real nature of the transaction, and getting the arrest declared illegal. This, however, requires some time to effect, as, if he succeeds in the Tribunal de Commerce, the nominal creditor appeals to the Cour Impériale, and months elapse before a final judgment can be obtained. In the meantime the unfortunate debtor must remain in prison, unless he can deposit the amount claimed in the Classe des Consignations, or give bail; and as the surety is not only answerable, as in England, for the appearance of the debtor, but also for the payment of the debt and costs in case judgment is given against him and he is unable to meet the demand, it is almost impossible for a foreigner to find a substantial person willing to undertake responsibility. In England no distinction is made as to liability to arrest between a British subject and a foreigner, as neither can be arrested on mesne process, (that is, before judgment), unless the creditor can prove, to the satisfaction of a judge, that the debtor intends to leave the country. Art. 11, tit. 1, liv. 1, of the Code Napoleon, says:—'L'étranger jouira en France des mêmes droits civils que ceux qui sont ou seront accordés aux Français par les traités de la nation à laquelle cet étranger appartiendra.' It is not, however, sufficient that certain rights are accorded to Frenchmen by the laws of a foreign country for the subjects of that country to enjoy the same privileges in France; the reciprocity must be expressly stipulated for by treaty. (See Rogron's note on this article in his Code Civil Expliqué). Now, no treaty exists which puts Frenchmen in England and Englishmen in France upon an equality as to arrest for debt, the former enjoying in England the same privilege in that respect as a British subject, purely and simply by the law of the land. It strikes me, however, that if the case were brought officially to the notice of the French Government, they would admit the equity of the claim of British subjects to enjoy in France the same privileges as the law of England accords to Frenchmen in that country; and the cordial alliance which now exists between the two nations, the high sense of justice of the Emperor of the French, and the well-known zeal of our ambassador at Paris, seem to render the present moment peculiarly favourable for obtaining the desired object."

 In the debate on the proposed consolidation of the Statutes, on the 9th February, 1854, Lord Campbell said, "that the Statutes at Large extended to about fifty volumes folio, but all the Statutes which were usually required by lawyers for reference might be found in three octavo volumes compiled by his learned friend Mr. Welsby. When he (Lord Campbell) was upon the bench he always had this work by him, and no Statutes were ever referred to by the Bar which he could not find in it."

This important Work will be continued annually, by an Edition of the Statutes, arranged on a similar plan, with a full Index, being published shortly after the close of each Session. Edited by E. BEAVAN, Esq. Three Supplements are now ready, containing the Statutes of 1854, price 9*s.* 6*d.*; 1855, price 9*s.* 6*d.*; and 1856, price 6*s.*, sewed.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 19, 1857.

AN illustration of the rule, which in general prohibits a party to a cause from setting up the jus tertii, is afforded by the late case of Edwards v. English, (26 L. J., Q. B., 193). It was an interpleader issue in the ordinary form. The plaintiff claimed the goods under a bill of sale from the execution debtor, dated the 20th October, 1856, and duly registered. The defendant, who was the execution creditor, and whose execution had been put in force on the 21st October, 1856, sought to displace the plaintiff's claim by tendering in evidence a prior bill of sale of the same goods from the execution debtor to one Hatton. This bill of sale had been made bonâ fide, but had been held to be invalid against the same defendant, (execution creditor), under the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36, s. 1, on the ground that the affidavit filed with it did not contain a description of the residence and occupation of the assignor*. The evidence of this prior bill of sale was rejected at the trial, and it was afterwards held by the Court in Banc to have been properly rejected. It was contended on behalf of the execution creditor—First, that the prior bill of sale afforded an answer to the claim, because, although void as against the parties mentioned in the statute—namely, execution creditors, assignees in bankruptcy or insolvency, and trustees for the benefit of creditors—it was still valid against a subsequent assignee of the goods, who was not among the parties named in the statute; in other words, that the prior bill of sale, though void as against the defendant, was not void as against the plaintiff; and that if the goods should be delivered to the plaintiff under his bill of sale, Hatton could maintain trover against him for them. Secondly, it was insisted that the question was concluded by authority, as the Court of Exchequer had decided, in Gadsden v. Barrow, (9 Exch. 514), that a prior bill of sale, valid in all respects, might be set up by the defendant under similar circumstances.

The Court, however, said that the nature of an interpleader issue is substantially to inform the conscience of the Court whether the execution debtor had any goods which were liable to the execution, and not to ascertain or settle the strict rights of other parties laying claim to the goods. The very case set up by the execution creditor went to shew that the goods seized were not the goods of the execution debtor, that he had parted with all property in them, and that therefore they were not liable to the execution. The Court referred, in support of their view, to Carne v. Brice, (7 M. & W. 183), which was a feigned issue between an execution creditor and the trustees of the debtor's wife, the issue being whether the goods were the debtor's; and it was held that the question to be tried between those particular parties was, whether the goods were liable to be taken in execution as the property of the husband, or whether they were the wife's, and that the trustees could not set up the jus tertii—that of the assignees in bankruptcy of the husband. This case they considered was confirmed, rather than shaken, by Chase v. Goble, (2 Mac. & G. 930), in which the execution creditor was allowed to shew that the goods were the property of the debtor's assignees by relation to an act of bankruptcy before the conveyance to the claimant, because there the evidence admitted was to shew that the deed relied upon by the claimant was in itself void as an act of bankruptcy. The case of Gadsden v. Barrow was distinguished upon the ground that there the prior bill of sale was valid in omnibus.

* See Hatton v. English, (26 L. J., Q. B., 161), and also Allen v. Thompson, (1 H. & Norm. 15; 2 Jur., N. S., 451).

We submit, however, that this distinction somewhat militates against the rule, that the only question upon an interpleader issue is, whether the goods seized were or were not liable to the execution as being the debtor's goods, because, if the prior bill of sale was valid against the debtor, he had no property whatever in the goods at the time of the seizure. We incline to the opinion that Gadsden v. Barrow cannot stand consistently with the rule adopted by the Court in the principal case; and it appears that Martin, B., felt some doubt as to the correctness of the decision of his Court, for that learned judge said in Gadsden v. Barrow, "It seems to me unreasonable that the execution creditor should get the goods, when, upon his own evidence, he has no right to them." And if the prior bill of sale in the principal case was valid as against the subsequent assignee, it would for the purposes of the issue then before the Court be the same as if it were valid in omnibus. The Court of Queen's Bench, however, intimated that in their opinion the claimant under the first bill of sale could not successfully demand the goods, if they were restored to the claimant under the second bill of sale, but that facts might be pleaded which would be a good defence to such a demand, if not at law, at all events in equity. If this be so, then the statute may be read as declaring that unregistered bills of sale shall be void as against subsequent assignees of the goods.

It may be said that the case which we have been considering turns entirely upon the peculiar nature of a feigned issue. Even if that be so, it is a decision of importance, as a large number of such issues come before the Courts, and a principle, which may be applied to all of them, is here clearly enunciated. But the decision clearly goes beyond the form of such issues, for in this instance the question as stated in the issue was, whether the goods were the goods of the plaintiff, i. e. of the claimant, not of the execution debtor; and yet the Court held the substantial question to be, whether they were the goods of the debtor, so as to be liable to the execution. The case moreover involves a wider interpretation of the statute for registering bills of sale than has hitherto been put upon it, and shews the tendency of our Courts not to allow litigants to set up claims and titles of third persons, who are neither parties to the cause, nor in any way identified with them.

The Thames Conservancy Act (20 & 21 Vict. c. 147) comes into operation on the 29th instant, and on account of its importance we at once present a summary of its main provisions to our readers. Many of them are doubtless aware that it is the result of a long protracted dispute between the Crown and the corporation of the city of London respecting the right to the soil and bed of the river, so far as the tide flows and reflows, and that at the commencement of the year her Majesty conveyed all her estate in the same to the corporation, as conservators of the river, upon certain trusts. All this, and much more, is recited in the preamble to the act, wherein it is also stated that the master and brethren of the Trinity House are entitled to the lastage and ballastage of vessels in the river, that many encroachments have been made on its shores and banks, and that in consequence of the great increase of steam navigation it has become necessary to provide safe and convenient places for embarking and disembarking steam-boat passengers. In order to effectuate the objects of the act, twelve conservators of the river Thames are to be appointed, and incorporated by that title. They will be the Lord Mayor, two of the aldermen, four of the Common Council, the deputy master of the Trinity House, two persons appointed by the Admiralty, one person by the Board of Trade, and one by the Trinity House. The Common Council are to appoint the two aldermen and the four members of their own body, who are to be conservators, and who are to continue in office so long as they are respectively aldermen and members of the Common Council. Provision is made for the supply of vacancies, and it is enacted that no bankrupt or insolvent person is to be a conservator. Officers for carrying the act into execution are to be appointed by the conservators at such salaries as they think reasonable, but the appointment of any new harbour master or deputy harbour master (whose duties are defined by the act) must be approved by the Trinity House. Conservancy meetings are to be presided over by the Lord Mayor, and five of the conservators are to be a quorum. Minutes of the proceedings, appointments, contracts, &c. are to be entered in a book, and to be received in evidence.

The powers given to the conservators by this statute are very extensive. They may purchase and hold lands. The estate of the Crown and of the corporation in the bed, soil, and shores of the river, together with all rights relating to the conservancy and regulation, and to the port of London, are vested in the conservators, reserving only to the Crown such part of the soil as is adjacent to any department of her Majesty's Government. The conservators are further empowered to enter into contracts for the purposes of the act, and to make bye-laws, rules, and orders for the regulation and improvement of the river and the navigation thereof, and (inter alia) for compelling vessels at anchor or otherwise to carry or exhibit lights from sunset to sunrise. Penalties not exceeding the sum of 5*l.* for breach of such bye-laws may be imposed. They may also grant to owners or occupiers of land fronting the river license to make a dock, pier, wharf, embankment, &c. in front of the land. They may authorise the erection of piers and landing-places, or may themselves erect them; free public stairs or landing-places, instead of those of the Watermen's Company, may be provided; toll-houses may be built on or near the piers, &c., where they may demand for every vessel touching at the pier, &c., for the purpose of landing or embarking passengers and goods, for every time of calling, sixpence, to be paid by the master of the vessel. They may require masters of sunken vessels to raise the same, and in default may do it themselves, and sell the vessel, with the tackle, &c.; and if the proceeds are insufficient to pay the expenses, they may recover the remainder from such masters. They are empowered to remove obstructions, and also any floating timber which impedes navigation; to place and lay down necessary buoys and beacons; to cut the banks of the river for the purpose of making, enlarging, or repairing any dock, canal, drain, &c.; to repair wharves, after default of owners to obey notice to that effect, and to recover the expense from such owners; to dredge and cleanse the river; to prevent ballast being taken in places where its removal may be injurious to navigation; and, in short, to do all acts necessary for the preservation of public interests connected with the river. No works, however, are to be commenced or executed upon the bed or shores of the river without the approval of the Admiralty.

The duties and liabilities of the conservators will be to present to both Houses of Parliament every year a general report of their proceedings; to deliver every year to the Commissioners of Woods and Forests a schedule of all sales, leases, or grants for docks, wharves, or any other works, and the sums received for the same, and to pay one-third of the amount to the said commissioners; to keep books of accounts, which shall be open to the inspection of the conservators, creditors, and mortgagees; to publish particulars of penalties; and to keep a register of mortgages, annuities, and transfers.

A fund called the "Conservancy Fund" is to be formed from the tolls, tonnage, port and harbour dues, rent, &c. received under the act, (except the part directed to be paid to the Commissioners of Woods and Forests). Sums already in hand from similar sources, together with the Port of London Tonnage Duty Fund, (accumulated under the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 32), are to be transferred to this fund.

The conservators may, for the purposes of the act, borrow money, not exceeding 100,000*l.*, on the credit of the fines, rents, tolls, &c.

The rights saved by the act are those of the Trinity House, the Commissioners of Sewers, the Metropolitan Board of Works, the Dock Companies in the port of London, the Watermen's Company, the Crown in the river Medway, the Duchies of Cornwall and Lancaster, the Inner and Middle Temple, the legal rights of ferry, and some others of less importance. The act is not to affect her Majesty's ships.

The remaining clauses of the statute, which contains 181 sections, relate to the penalties imposed for offences against it, and to the mode of recovering them.

The Times of the 7th instant furnishes us with the following account of the proceedings in France against Mazzini, Ledru Rollin, and others, for having conspired (as it is said) to murder the Emperor of the French:—

"At the sitting of the Court of Assize the public prosecutor called on the Court to pass sentence on Ledru Rollin, Mazzini, Massarenti, and Campanella, who are accused of having, in complicity with Tibaldi, Grilli, and Bartolotti, already condemned, formed a plot to assassinate the Emperor of the French, but who have not surrendered to take their trial. The indictment and other documents having been read, the Court, after deliberation, gave a judgment to this effect:—It appeared from the examination before a magistrate, from documents produced, especially from letters of Mazzini, Massarenti, and Tibaldi, and from the disclosures of Bartolotti and Grilli, that in the course of the year 1857 Bartolotti and Grilli, having been recruited in London and York by Massarenti, an agent of Mazzini, were taken to the latter, 'who sent them to Paris to make an attempt on the life of the Emperor,' addressing them to Tibaldi, his agent in Paris, who was charged to direct them, and to remit to them the necessary instruments from those which had been deposited with him, and which consisted of sixteen pistols, loaded and primed, and of seven poniards. It appeared that Ledru Rollin, who in 1853 had caused 500f. to be given to a man named Kearsch, who admitted having formed at that time the project of attempting to kill the Emperor, was present at Mazzini's when Bartolotti for the first time was taken there; he took part in the discussion which ensued as to the time at which the Emperor was accustomed to go out; his presence at a conference essentially secret revealed the motive which took him there, and his participation in the plot; and, lastly, he supplied Bartolotti and Grilli with funds for their journey from London to Paris. It appeared that Bartolotti and Grilli left for Paris with passports in false names, and on their arrival went to Tibaldi, to whom they made themselves known by a password agreed on, and that that person took them to places at which they could approach the Emperor, and gave to Grilli two of the poniards deposited with him. Massarenti had brought Bartolotti up from York, and had threatened him with the anger of Mazzini for having left his post. Tibaldi, in a letter to Mazzini, had given an account of the measures taken by him with respect to Bartolotti and Grilli, terminating his letter with these significant words—'Our sick man' (meaning the Emperor) 'is no better; he comes from time to time. I believe that, from this, it will be difficult to cure him, but we shall neglect nothing to attain the desired object.' In order the better to secure the execution of his homicidal project, Mazzini adhered to the proposition made to him by Massarenti, to send two other persons to Paris with the same object as Bartolotti and Grilli. On that occasion he wrote from Genoa, on the 10th January, to Campanella, in London, to come to an understanding with Massarenti on the affair at Paris, which was more than ever urgent and desirable, and for which two persons had already been sent to Paris, announcing to him that two others proposed themselves, and insisting that the four men should act two by two, independently of each other; adding that that was the best plan to follow, and recommending that the two new men should be sent to Tibaldi, who was in possession of the matériel; at the same time he gave similar instructions to Massarenti, adding, that if the friend had left (the Emperor, who at that time was at Fontainebleau, was so designated) 'nothing could be done,' and that his return from the country must be waited for; and, lastly, Mazzini joined to the letter a few words of recommendation to Tibaldi, to the effect that he should receive the two new men as he had received the two others, and should treat them also without reserve, again terminating by the recommendation that they 'should act independently of each other, as that was the best for all.' From all these circumstances the Court declared that 'a resolution had been agreed on and concerted between Mazzini, Ledru Rollin, Campanella, Massarenti, Tibaldi, Bartolotti, and Grilli, to attempt to kill the Emperor, which resolution had been followed by an act calculated to prepare its execution, whereby the crime of forming a plot, (crime de complot), punished by art. 89 of the Penal Code, had been committed,' It therefore condemned Mazzini, Ledru Rollin, Campanella, and Massarenti, all four absent, to transportation."

It has been stated in several of our journals that a demand will be made upon the English Government for the extradition of these contumaces under the treaty of 1845 between this country and France. We cannot, however, suppose that such a demand, if made, would be acceded to, because the treaty in question applies neither to political offences nor to offences committed out of France. According to our law, a conspiracy to assassinate the Sovereign of the realm is high treason; it is a blow aimed at the head of the body politic, and is clearly a political crime. Whether the charge against the persons whose surrender may be demanded falls under the category of political offences or not must, we presume, be decided according to the law of the country upon which the demand is made, for otherwise the other contracting Government might render the exception nugatory, by declaring, subsequently to the making of the treaty, that no offences, according to its law, should be political offences. The importance of preserving, in spirit as well as in letter, an exception which was introduced for the purpose of affording a sanctuary to the oppressed and persecuted will be obvious to our readers without comment from us. Again: the conspiracy, or "forming a plot," which in this instance is the charge, occurred, if at all, in this country, so far as the four absentees are concerned. The agreement, which is the gist of this offence, was made here, if anywhere; and the overt act, if it can be called one, committed in France by the other accused, can hardly be said, we presume, to bring the case within the treaty. There is abundant reason why the words of the treaty should not be strained for this purpose, because the charge can be tried here, it being a violation of the laws of this country to plot against foreign governments with whom we are at peace. It is an offence against the comity of nations, and tends to involve us in war with the injured country. It was upon these grounds that Peltier was tried in this country for his libel upon Napoleon Buonaparte; and upon the same grounds Mazzini and others may be indicted and tried here for their alleged crime against the present Emperor of France.

The construction to be placed on the 1st section of Lord Tenterden's Act, (9 Geo. 4, c. 14), in reference to the sense in which the word "acknowledgment" is to be understood, would appear, in the opinion of Bramwell, B., reported in the case of Sidwell v. Mason, (3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 649), to be not yet satisfactorily settled. The words of the 1st section of that statute are, "that in actions of debt or upon the case, grounded upon any simple contract, no acknowledgment or promise by words only shall be deemed sufficient evidence of a new or continuing contract whereby to take any case out of the operation of" the stat. 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, "or to deprive any party of the benefit thereof, unless such acknowledgment or promise shall be made or contained by or in some writing to be signed by the party chargeable thereby." The questions to which the learned judge addressed himself were, first, whether, in an action of debt on a simple contract, an acknowledgment sufficient to take the cause of action out of the Statute of Limitations must be one that would, had the action been in assumpsit, have been a bar to the statute; and he appeared to be of opinion that in actions of debt an acknowledgment would be sufficient, though no promise could, according to the rules of law, be implied from its terms. Secondly, whether an expression of a hope by the debtor respecting his ability to pay a debt renders the acknowledgment of his liability unavailing against the statute. "I own," he observes, "I think it is a mistake to hold, as was done in some of the decided cases, that because, along with an unconditional acknowledgment of a debt, a man expresses a hope that he will be able to pay it, i. e. do what he must do, and acknowledges he ought to do, his acknowledgment does not satisfy the statute." The argument of the learned judge in support of the distinction he draws between the actions of debt and assumpsit is, that inasmuch as in an action of debt on simple contract the cause of action does not depend upon a promise, and that in the declaration no promise is laid, the mere acknowledgment of a liability will be sufficient to support, while a promise would be inconsistent with, the declaration in such action; and that the words of Lord Tenterden's Act must be taken to mean, that in an action of debt a written acknowledgment will take it out of the statute, and that in an action on the case a promise in writing will have that effect.

The opinion of the learned baron, that in an action of debt "the cause of action does not depend upon a promise," seems open to exception. In Slade's case (4 Rep. 508) it was resolved, that in every contract executory an action of debt or an action on the case on assumpsit would lie. In Cloves v. Williams (3 Bing. N. C. 868) the Court held that a count stating that the defendant accepted the bill, and promised to pay the amount, whereby an action had accrued to the plaintiff to demand the amount, was substantially a count in debt; and in Compton v. Taylor, (4 M. & W. 139), Parke, B., referring to Cloves v. Williams, observes, "I was anxious to find an authority for what seemed so consistent with good sense. There is no substantial difference between promising and agreeing." It may thence be inferred that the promise to be implied from the acknowledgment would, when the action was in debt, be conformable to and support the declaration.

The distinction suggested, that in sect. 1 of stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 14, the word "acknowledgment" may refer to "debt," and the word "promise" to "action on the case," would not seem, if the statute can derive any elucidation from Lord Tenterden's judgment in the case of Tanner v. Smart, (6 B. & Cr. 603), a case decided shortly before the statute, to have been in the mind of the author when he drew it. At p. 605, referring to the act of Jac. 1, Lord Tenterden observes, "Though this statute puts all these actions on the same footing, it is only in actions of assumpsit that an acknowledgment has been held an answer;" clearly shewing that he considered the action of debt to come under the class of actions founded on promises, and that an acknowledgment that would take one cause of action founded on contract out of the Statute of Limitations would take another. That Lord Tenterden's Act made no alteration in the principle as to the legal effect of an acknowledgment or promise was laid down by Tindal, C. J., in Maydon v. Williams, (7 Bing. 167). In the case of Hart v. Prendergast, (14 M. & W. 746), Rolfe, B., remarks, "The principle is said to be, that the document must contain either a promise to pay the debt, or an acknowledgment from which a promise may be inferred. Perhaps it would be more correct to say, that there must in all cases be a promise to pay, but that from a simple acknowledgment the law implies a promise; but there must in all cases be a promise in order to support the declaration." It may, then, be presumed, that in Mr. Baron Rolfe's opinion, the word "promise" in the act could not refer only to actions on the case founded on a simple contract. If the promise, which the cases decide must be implied from the acknowledgment, will support the declaration when framed in debt, and if, therefore, the construction of Lord Tenterden's Act suggested by Bramwell, B., cannot be supported, it is conceived that an acknowledgment, to have the effect of barring the Statute of Limitations when an action of debt is brought, must be of as high a nature, and afford as conclusive evidence of the renewed liability of the debtor, as in an action of assumpsit.

The reason why the Courts have held that any expression of hope or expectation as to the payment of a debt, coupled with a clear acknowledgment of liability, renders such acknowledgment insufficient to take the debt out of the operation of the statute, may, perhaps, be found in the fact, that it is to the promise that the law attaches importance, not to the acknowledgment; and it is only by a presumption of law, described to be "a remnant of that judicial repugnance to the Statute of Limitations which at one time had nearly abolished it," that a promise has been implied from a simple acknowledgment. It has been denied by an American judge that such intendment is sound in principle. In the case of Benghaus v. Calhoun, (6 Watts's Penn. Rep. 219; quoted in Angell on Limitations, p. 231), Gibson, C. J., observes, "It follows neither necessarily nor naturally that the acknowledged existence of a debt, barred only so far as regards its means of enforcement, implies a promise to pay it; and an express promise it is not pretended to be. . . . It is a postulate of the doctrine that the statute which takes away the remedy leaves the existence of the duty untouched. . . . But a naked duty or moral obligation, though a sufficient consideration for an express promise, raises no presumption by implication of law; consequently, though we might accurately suppose the recognition of a debt to be evidence of consideration, we might not, agreeably to admitted analogies, suppose it to be evidence of a promise, because it is equally consistent with a declared determination not to pay." If this reasoning be sound, the difficulty observed on by Bramwell, B., may be attributed to the desire of the Courts to depart no further from the true principle by which a debt should be taken out of the statute—that is, as it is conceived, by an express promise to pay it. Though the decisions have established that a promise may be implied from an acknowledgment, anything ultra such acknowledgment, any statement, as of hope or expectation, that would be a qualification of an express promise to pay on demand, the law holds to be inconsistent with the implication it raises from a simple acknowledgment.

If "the decisions on this head of law are not in a satisfactory condition," it is submitted that any want of uniformity arises, not from too strict an interpretation of the acknowledgment, and a denial that a promise can be implied from its terms, but rather by allowing a debt to be taken out of the effect of the Statute of Limitations by any other means than by an express promise to pay it.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 26, 1857.

Although a married woman could formerly by fine or recovery, and now after the abolition of fines and recoveries can by a deed acknowledged, deal, amongst other interests, with her reversionary interests in real estate, she has never been allowed to dispose of or deal with her reversionary interests in personal property not settled to her separate use; and even though her husband joined with her in an assignment thereof, his own interest, subject to her equity to a settlement in the event of such property ceasing to be reversionary during her life, alone passed to the assignees; so that in the event of the wife outliving her husband, the property still continuing reversionary, it would survive to her. (See Hornsby v. Lee, 2 Mad. 16; Box v. Box, 2 Con. & L. 605; Box v. Jackson, 1 Dru. 55; Le Vasseur v. Scratton, 14 Sim. 116; and Ellison v. Elwin, 13 Sim. 309).

Upon the same principle, in a case very frequently referred to, it was held, that where an annuity or life interest in a fund was given to a married woman, and not settled to her separate use, the husband could not, even with her concurrence, dispose of her life interest, except during his own life; for if she outlived him, such part of the income as would be enjoyed by her after the coverture had ended was reversionary. (See Stiffe v. Everitt, 1 My. & C. 37).

It was afterwards attempted to evade the law by obtaining for the married woman an assignment of all preceding interests, so as thereby, if possible, to convert her reversionary interest into an interest in possession, and thus enable her husband to deal with it, and bar her right by survivorship. It was, however, held, that the husband could not by these means do indirectly what he could not do directly; and that although the interests of all other persons were vested in the wife, no merger would take place, so that the husband could not assign such property; and if it were in court, although the consent of all other parties interested in it were obtained, it would not be ordered to be paid out to the husband or his assignees. This was determined by Lord Cottenham in the important case of Whittle v. Henning, (2 Ph. 731), affirming the decision of Lord Langdale, M. R., (reported 11 Beav. 222), and overruling the decision of Sir L. Shadwell, V. C., in Hall v. Hugonin, (14 Sim. 595); and his Lordship in that case seems clearly to have considered that the disability imposed upon a married woman, with regard to the alienation of her reversionary interest in her personalty, was highly beneficial to her; for when it was urged in argument that the married woman had, on obtaining a surrender or release of all other interests in a fund in which she had a reversionary interest, by means of a species of merger, rendered it an interest in possession, his Lordship said, "that such an argument could only prevail if the Court should, by analogy to law, establish an equitable merger for the sole purpose of depriving the wife of the protection to her reversionary interest which it has hitherto afforded, which would be to permit a supposed analogy to the rules of law to defeat the rules and practice of the Court of equity in the protection it afforded to married women, although in all other cases it disregarded the rules of law and the rights of husbands when they interfered with such rules and practice."

Moreover, the Court of Chancery allows a married woman no equity to a settlement out of her reversionary personal property. The reason for this is stated to be, that the right to a settlement is an obligation which the Court fastens, not upon the property, but upon the right to receive it; and that if the right attaches at all, it must attach with all its incidents, one of which is, that the wife waiving it, must waive it by her consent in court, which she cannot do in the case of reversionary personal property. (Osborn v. Morgan, 9 Hare, 434). Under the old law, therefore, a married woman would have been obliged to wait until her personal property ceased to be reversionary before she could claim a settlement out of it.

Notwithstanding the sedulous endeavours of the Court of Chancery by every means to render the reversionary interests in personalty of a married woman inalienable, so as to give her a chance of taking it by survivorship, it has been thought by many that this, like other systems of protection, was injurious to those for whom it was intended to be beneficial; and it was said that as in many cases it must be of the highest importance for a married woman to be able to dispose of her reversionary interest in personalty, the law, by rendering such disposition illegal, did not prevent all dealings with, but did prevent the best price being obtained for it; since whoever purchased such a reversionary interest would, in calculating its price, demand a large allowance to be made for the contingency of the wife surviving her husband; and if the husband and wife attempted to sell her interest by survivorship, for the contingency of the wife, who survived her husband, notwithstanding she had joined in an assignment, insisting upon her legal rights notwithstanding the assignment. It was also alleged that the result of the law was to throw such transactions into the hands of not the most respectable individuals, greatly to the detriment of those who sold their reversionary interests.

On the other hand, many opposed any change in the law, as putting it in the power of married women inconsiderately, and for a momentary advantage, to deprive themselves of what was intended to be a permanent provision for them. A bill upon this subject, having been for several sessions before the Legislature, has at length received its sanction, though accompanied by amendments which very materially narrow the operation which its authors intended it should have.

This act, (20 & 21 Vict. c. 57), which does not extend to Scotland, enacts, that "after the thirty-first day of December, 1857, it shall be lawful for every married woman by deed to dispose of every future or reversionary interest, whether vested or contingent, of such married woman, or her husband in her right, in any personal estate whatsoever to which she shall be entitled under any instrument made after the said thirty-first day of December, 1857, (except such a settlement as after mentioned), and also to release or extinguish any power which may be vested in, or limited or reserved to, her in regard to any such personal estate, as fully and effectually as she could do if she were a feme sole; and also to release and extinguish her right or equity to a settlement out of any personal estate to which she, or her husband in her right, may be entitled in possession under any such instrument as aforesaid; save and except that no such disposition, release, or extinguishment shall be valid unless the husband concur in the deed by which the same shall be effected, nor unless the deed be acknowledged by her as hereinafter directed: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall extend to any reversionary interests to which she shall become entitled by virtue of any deed, will, or instrument by which she shall be restrained from alienating or affecting the same." (Sect. 1). The 2nd section provides that deeds to be executed in England or Wales for the purposes of the act must be acknowledged in the manner required by the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74; and deeds to be executed in Ireland in the manner required by the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 92.

Then follows a proviso, "That the powers of disposition given to a married woman by the act shall not interfere with any power which independently of the act may be vested in or limited or reserved to her, so as to prevent her from exercising such power in any case, except so far as, by any disposition made by her under the act, she may be prevented from so doing in consequence of such power having been suspended or extinguished by such disposition." (Sect. 3).

And it is also provided, "That the powers of disposition hereby given to a married woman shall not enable her to dispose of any interest in personal estate settled upon her by any settlement or agreement for a settlement made on the occasion of her marriage." (Sect. 4).

As a general rule, then, under this act married women may, after the 31st December, 1857, with the concurrence of their husbands, by deed acknowledged, deal with reversionary interests in personalty which they may become entitled to by any instrument made after that day.

There is, however, an important exception to this rule in the case of reversionary interests in personal estate comprised in any settlement or agreement for a settlement on marriage. As to a very large class of cases, therefore, the law remains unaltered.

Again: it puts it in the power of all persons conferring reversionary interests in personalty on married women, "by any deed, will, or instrument," to restrain her from alienating or affecting the same. It is therefore by no means improbable that the introduction of clauses restraining alienation will still further lessen the operation of the act.

The 3rd section of the act is not very clearly expressed, and its meaning may, perhaps, be best illustrated by an example. Suppose personal property be bequeathed to A. for life, remainder to B., a married woman, absolutely, with a power of sale to B. during the life of A.: this act does not propose to interfere with the power of A. to sell under the power, as she can at present, but she may, by a disposition under the act, either wholly or partially suspend or extinguish the power.

Questions doubtless will arise under this act; for instance, as we have already seen, a married woman cannot now insist upon her equity to a settlement, because she cannot waive her right to a settlement; but as she can now, in cases coming within the operation of the act, "extinguish her right or equity to a settlement," it would seem to follow that she can now apply in such cases for a settlement; but the act has no express provision on the subject.

The act, in some cases, seems to put married women to unnecessary expense. Suppose, for instance, there be in court reversionary personal property, and that the married woman and the parties having prior interests are willing to concur in giving the property to the husband unconditionally, or upon the terms of his making a settlement upon his wife, she will nevertheless, it seems, be obliged, with the concurrence of her husband, to execute a deed acknowledged in order to effect that object; for her examination by the Court will not, as in the case of her interest being immediate or in possession, be sufficient for that purpose. This seems to be an oversight.

Did our space allow it, other difficulties likely to arise when the act comes into operation might be pointed out. It is, however, on the whole, an average specimen of the mode in which our law of property is altered, if not amended, by the Legislature.

The applicability of compensation clauses in acts of Parliament obtained by public companies, and in similar statutes, was discussed, and a general principle upon the subject laid down, in the case of Broadbent v. The Imperial Gas-light Company, (3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 221; 26 L. J., Ch., 276). The question before the Court was, whether an injunction should be granted to restrain the defendants from making gas in a manner injurious to the garden of the plaintiff, who was a market gardener in Fulham. This depended in some respects upon the answer to another question, viz. whether the plaintiff could obtain redress under the compensation clause, (sect. 68 of the Lands Clauses Act), which was incorporated in the special act of the Gas Company, because if he could it was unnecessary for the Court to interfere by injunction. Upon appeal to the Lord Chancellor from an order of Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., granting the injunction, the attendance of Crompton and Willes, JJ., was requested, for the purpose of a construction being put upon such compensation clause. It appeared that the company had been established for many years, and the plaintiff took his garden on lease in 1832. Until the year 1851 the company had manufactured their gas in a retort-house which was situated about 240 feet from the garden; but in that year they built a new retort-house much nearer to the garden, and manufactured gas to a much larger extent, and so as to be injurious to the garden. An action having been brought for such injury, and having been referred, an award was made in favour of the plaintiff for the damage he had sustained up to the year 1854. In 1856 the company began still further to add to their works, and to increase the evil to the plaintiff which had previously existed. It was under these circumstances the injunction was sought. Upon the main question the two common-law judges were of opinion, which was confirmed by that of the Lord Chancellor, that this was not an injury for which compensation could be claimed by the plaintiff, as one whose land was "injuriously affected by the execution of the works" of the company. The broad principle upon which the judgment proceeded was, that the 68th section applies only where compensation is sought for the consequences of works executed by authority of the act of Parliament, and therefore which would be altogether unredressed were not statutory compensation given. In such a case the act of Parliament would of itself be a defence to an action or indictment; but this would not be so in respect of a wrongful act unauthorised by the statute, for which, therefore, the common-law remedies are still open. Thus, for an injury caused by reason of the execution of works authorised by the statute, when properly done, compensation must be sought under the statute; if, however, they are negligently or improperly executed, so as to cause damage to other persons, an action or indictment will lie; so, where the acts done are not authorised by the act of Parliament. If the acts done, however, are authorised by the act of Parliament, and properly done, but do not come within the expression "works executed," there is no remedy either by statute or at common law, the public benefit, in such case, being considered sufficient compensation. In the instance before the Court it was held, that the injury—that is to say, making the gas so near the garden as to injure it—was not authorised by the act, and was not by reason of a "work executed" by the company; and further, that in this case a clear remedy was reserved independently of the compensation clause; as, by the 29th section of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 10 & 11 Vict. c. 15, also incorporated, it is enacted, that "nothing in this or the special act contained shall prevent the undertakers from being liable to an indictment for nuisance, or to any other legal proceeding to which they may be liable in consequence of making or supplying gas." The following extracts from the judgment of the two common-law judges will further illustrate the above views, and shew clearly the nature of the decision:—"We are of opinion," they said, "that no compensation is given by the 68th section, or, generally speaking, by any compensation clause, in matters not made lawful, but which, notwithstanding the statute containing or incorporating the compensation clause, remain wrongful acts, for which the remedy by action is not taken away. We consider it to be an universal rule, applicable to this class of statutes, that statutory compensation is given only for acts authorised by the statute; in effect taking away the right of action of the person injured. . . . . All the acts, taken together, will read thus—that the company may make such works as are necessary for the lighting of the specified districts; that the company shall have no privilege or exemption from liability for anything they may do in making or supplying gas; and in respect of any injury caused by erecting their permanent works, compensation may be obtained, under the 68th section, as for a matter rendered lawful; but that for damage caused by making or supplying gas to an extent injurious to the public or to individuals, and therefore unauthorised by the act, the remedy shall be by indictment or by action. . . . . The injury in question could not be said to have resulted from the execution of the works, within the meaning of these words in the section. The expression 'the works' seems to us more properly to apply to the construction of the manufactory than to the use of it from day to day for the purpose of making or supplying gas. If an attempt were made to apply the 68th section to the damage, present and future, it would be met by the impossibility of ascertaining at once the amount of the future damage. . . . . . On the part of the defendants, the cases upon the construction of railway acts were referred to as favourable to their argument. We, however, take a different view of their effect. We are not aware of any decided case in which a railway company, properly executing the powers expressly or impliedly conferred upon them by the special act, other than and after the making of the permanent works, has been held liable to make statutory compensation under sect. 68. We are aware that such compensation has been given by juries, but we are not aware that that course has been sanctioned by any Court in Westminster Hall. The cases relating to railways seem to us to establish that compensation is given in respect of the calculable damage caused, or to be caused, in or by the execution of the permanent works of the company authorised by the statute; for instance, obstructing ways or injuring lights. The question as to when future damage may be assessed is discussed in the judgment of Parke, B., in Lee v. Milner, (2 M. & W. 824). It is also established, that an injurious act, authorised by statute, and done by the company negligently, in abuse of their statutory powers, is the proper subject of an action, and that an act other than the erection of the permanent works, if properly done by the company in pursuance of the statute, whatever damage it may cause, is considered sufficiently compensated for by the public benefit expected to follow, and is neither a subject of action nor of compensation. Some of these points were considered in a recent case of Lawrence v. The Great Northern Railway Company, (16 Q. B. 243)." And with reference to this part of the judgment the Lord Chancellor said, "The learned judges came to the conclusion that the 68th section of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act did not apply, for that act only gave compensation in cases where the company incorporated was doing an act authorised by the private act, but which nevertheless caused damage to an individual; as, for instance, if they were to build a retort-house where they were authorised, and wholly blocked up the light of my house, that would have been an act authorised by the section for the making and supplying of gas, and it would have been an act as to which, but for that clause, there would have been no redress."

Therefore, as a general rule, when we have to inquire whether the compensation clause applies, we should consider first whether the act complained of was done in execution of the works of the company, and if so, whether they were works authorised by the act. If they were, compensation may be sought under the section. If, however, the injury was caused by the improper or negligent execution of such works, or if they were not authorised by the statute, the remedy is by indictment or action. If the injury was not by reason of works executed, but of acts authorised by the statute, there is no remedy either by statute or at common law.

Another case illustrating the same principles is Stainton v. Woolrych, (3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 257; 26 L. J., Ch., 300). There the injury was caused by the execution of works authorised by the statute; an injunction was refused, and the plaintiff was left to seek statutory compensation. The complaint was against the Metropolitan Board of Works and the Lewisham District Board of Works, for making sewers, whereby they had withdrawn the water from an ancient spring, and drained the ponds of the plaintiff. The Master of the Rolls, in delivering judgment, first distinguished the case before him from those in which the question was between adjoining owners of land, saying that the defendants could not be considered as being clothed with the rights or obligations of contiguous landowners, but that their position was defined by statute. "If either of these boards," said the learned judge, "were producing this injury by the unskilful or improper construction of these sewers, the Court would interfere to prevent it. The cases of Jones v. Bird (5 B. & Al. 837) and The Grocers' Company v. Donne (3 Bing. N. C. 34) do not apply to this, because the evidence shews that both these sewers are constructed skilfully, and are well adapted to discharge the duties imposed on them. . . . . The right of the plaintiff to the enjoyment of the water is interfered with, but as it is done under the provisions of an act of Parliament, the right of the plaintiff is limited to a claim for compensation. No doubt it may well happen that in this, as in many other cases, of which the experience of persons connected with public works, such as railways and canals, or the like, may furnish many instances, the sums awarded by a jury may not be a real compensation for the injury done. A juty, like some of the neighbours, who call this 'Stainton's folly[*],' may be unable to appreciate the pleasure enjoyed by the plaintiff in this ornamental water. But this is an evil inseparable from these cases. The Legislature have thought fit to enact that individual rights, in other cases held so sacred, are in this case to be sacrificed for the public benefit, and has conceded to juries the power and duty to give such compensation as they shall consider to be fair and just to the owner for the loss he sustains—not a mere pecuniary loss, but taking into account the loss of pleasure and profit derived from it, even if it be to a considerable extent fanciful, and such as few others could sympathise with."

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

Sir,—There are two cases decided by Sir J. Stuart, V. C., which ought not, as I think, to be followed without undergoing the test of a rigorous examination. Probably The Jurist, or some of its correspondents, may be able to adduce some considerations which would clearly manifest the soundness or unsoundness of the decisions alluded to.

The first case to which I shall draw your attention is that of Goodall v. Gawthorne, (18 Jur., part 1, p. 927).

The question was, whether a posthumous heir or an intermediate heir should be entitled to rents accrued due between the death of the ancestor and the birth of the posthumous heir, but which had not been recovered by the intermediate heir. The Vice-Chancellor held the posthumous heir entitled. This decision evidently rests on the assumption, that on the birth of a posthumous heir his right relates back, so as to defeat the intermediate heirship as from the death of the ancestor. It is quite clear that such relation back does not subsist for all purposes; for the Vice-Chancellor admits, as undoubted law, that if the intermediate heir actually receive the rents, he shall not account for them, which he certainly would have to do if the relation back could be established as a general proposition. It is equally clear, on the authority of De Grey, C. J., in Goodtitle d. Newman v. Newman, (3 Wils. 526), that the doctrine of relation back could not, under the old law of tortious alienation, have been applied so as to revest the freehold in the posthumous heir, as against the feoffment of the intermediate heir.

[*] The plaintiff's testator, Mr. Stainton, at an expense of 2000*l*. and upwards, taking advantage of a spring of water in one of his fields, formed an ornamental pond, and conducted the stream through his grounds by a rivulet extending about three-quarters of a mile; it was also made to supply the house, and to flow through the flower-garden near the house into some ornamental ponds. His neighbours gave to his works the name of "Stainton's folly," and the Board of Works made a main sewer, and the District Board of Works made a sewer into the main sewer, so as to divert the spring and drain the ponds.

Under the old law of descent, if the intermediate heir had no actual seisin, there might have been good reason to contend, that as he had no descendible estate he should not be entitled to intermediate profits; but this can have no bearing on a case under the new law, where actual seisin of the ancestor is not required, and where actual seisin, if material to the question, had been confessedly gained by the intermediate heir. It is certainly introducing an anomaly to hold that the right to the intermediate rents depends on the fact whether the intermediate heir do or do not actually obtain possession of them—on a mere accident.

There is no authority whatever for the proposition that the posthumous heir had any reversion which would entitle him to distrain for the intermediate rents, as the Vice-Chancellor seemed to consider he might; although it seems true that on the birth of a posthumous heir the intermediate heir would lose his right of distress. No authority whatever was adduced to shew that an action for rent might not be maintained by the intermediate heir against the tenant. That the intermediate heir had lost his right of distress was no argument for his also having lost his right of action, the remedies being, as is well known, by no means coextensive. On the whole, this decision appears to me unsupported by authority, analogy, or convenience.

The other case is that of Davis v. Tollemache, (2 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1181). The question was, whether, if a tenant in tail, by a deed disclosing the nature of his estate, assume to convey all his estate and interest by way of mortgage, and covenant for further assurance, he shall be compelled to disentail. The point was decided in the negative.

The case of Machell v. Clarke, (2 Ld. Raym. 778), which appears to have an important bearing on the question, does not seem to have been cited in the arguments or decision. The effect of the conveyance clearly was to pass a fee to the mortgagee, voidable by the issue in tail; and the effect of barring the entail would not be an enlargement of the estate conveyed, as assumed by the Vice-Chancellor; for I apprehend a defeasible fee is as large in contemplation of law as an absolute one. It was simply impossible for the mortgagor to convey his estate tail to the mortgagee, or for the mortgagor on redemption to take back the estate tail. A disentailing assurance by the mortgagor would seem to come properly within the scope of a covenant for further assurance, as an act to confirm what was previously voidable.

Moreover, it does seem singular that the right of the tenant in tail to acquire an absolute fee by barring his issue and remainders over should not be deemed part of his interest in the lands assured, it being at the same time remembered, that if there be a reasonable doubt as to the extent of the grant or covenant, the grantee or covenantee must have the benefit of it.

⁂ In the debate on the proposed consolidation of the Statutes, on the 9th February, 1854, Lord Campbell said, "that the Statutes at Large extended to about fifty volumes folio, but all the Statutes which were usually required by lawyers for reference might be found in three octavo volumes compiled by his learned friend Mr. Welsby. When he (Lord Campbell) was upon the bench he always had this work by him, and no Statutes were ever referred to by the Bar which he could not find in it."

This important Work will be continued annually, by an Edition of the Statutes, arranged on a similar plan, with a full Index, being published shortly after the close of each Session. Edited by E. Beavan, Esq. Three Supplements are now ready, containing the Statutes of 1854, price 9*s.* 6*d.*; 1855, price 9*s.* 6*d.*; and 1856, price 6*s.*, sewed.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, OCTOBER 3, 1857.

A member of a firm cannot defend himself against the claims of creditors by shewing that he was induced to enter into the partnership by the fraud of others; neither can a shareholder in a company relieve himself from responsibility for its debts by shewing that he became a shareholder by reason of fraudulent misrepresentations made to him by the company or its directors. (Henderson v. The Royal British Bank, 3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 111; 26 L. J., Q. B., 112). Of course the case would be different as between the shareholders and the directors, who had actually perpetrated the fraud; they could not enforce any contract made under such circumstances. Some doubt, however, has been felt and expressed from time to time as to the effect of fraud by directors upon the relation of a shareholder to his co-shareholders, who were not actual parties to the deceit. The question then would seem to be reduced to one of agency. If the directors could be considered the agents of the company for this purpose, their representations would be those of the company, and, in the absence of condonation, would afford an answer to any claim by them for contribution or otherwise. This point may now be said to have been determined by several recent decisions, ending with Brockwell's case, (3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 879). It was sought to make Mr. Brockwell liable as a contributory to the debts of the Royal British Bank: the question, therefore, of shareholders' liability arose, not as to third parties, but inter se. Mr. Brockwell alleged, in answer, that he became a shareholder under the following circumstances:—In 1852 he opened an account with the bank, and in February, 1855, relying upon the truth of statements put forth by the directors in a report to the company, which was adopted by the company at a general meeting, and acted upon in the payment of dividends, he applied for and obtained three new shares, which were issued under a supplemental charter, and afterwards received two dividends upon such shares. He was held not to be liable. In the course of delivering his judgment, Sir R. T. Kindersley, V. C., made the following observations:—"The renewed charter was obtained by false representations. The whole existence of the company was one continued fraud. . . . Then comes the question whether these are the representations of the company, or merely made to the company, for which the company is not responsible. The report was received, and immediately a dividend was paid upon these representations. That report was, as well as all the reports were, I will not say circulated to the public by the express direction of the company, but certainly with the sanction of the body of directors these reports were published in newspapers, and made known to the public. Now, I apprehend the clear rule deduced from all the cases to be, that if a company makes representations which are false, a person who has been induced to take shares thereby is not bound, because the representations are false; but if the representations are made by a person who is not an agent of the company, he is still bound to the shareholders, though he has a remedy against the person who has deceived him. (Bell's case, 22 Beav. 35; 2 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 844; Holt's case, 22 Beav. 48). . . . Now, I think this question, as to the effect of these reports, is settled by the decisions of the House of Lords, or rather by those of Lord Cottenham and Lord St. Leonards. (The National Exchange Company of Glasgow v. Drew, 2 Macq. 125). There the representation made was in the shape of a report by the body of directors; and if it goes into circulation, as of course it does, it must be considered as a representation of the company. It was very ingeniously argued in that case that the shareholders were not the deceiving parties, but were deceived. But the answer to that is, that it is a body which by its nature can only act by its directors; that it is the duty of directors to make reports, and to make true reports; and when these reports are received, adopted, and acted upon, they become the reports of the company as a body. . . . It was said in the course of the argument before me, that this may be true as to a report published to the world at large, but here the directors added to the report that it was for the use of the proprietors only, which shews that it was a mere private and confidential communication to the shareholders only. Now, for the directors to be allowed to resort to such a flimsy contrivance, when this was a report made for the information not only of the shareholders, but of the public at large, would be to act contrary to the plainest dictates of common sense. . . . . It was next said, that a person induced by fraud to enter into a contract has no right to repudiate without reinstating all parties. But whom is he to reinstate? He must give back the dividends he has received. . . . . The next objection is, that other persons may have taken shares on the faith and confidence of finding Mr. Brockwell's name among the shareholders, and assuming him to be a person of good sense and stability. Now, in the first place, 'may have' is very different from 'have,' and I should say, 'Prove your proposition, and I will consider the consequences.' But why should he pay the debts due by the body at large because he has misled others? There is no foundation for any such objection. Next, if the original shareholders took original shares upon the faith of the same report which deceived Mr. Brockwell, the inference is that he must contribute with the others; but that assumes that they must contribute, though these eighty other persons have just as much right to say they are not shareholders. I do not resort to the principle laid down by the Master of the Rolls in Ireland, (Ginger's case, 5 Ir. Ch. & Com. Law Rep. 174), though it is a very sound principle. The next argument is, that after Mr. Brockwell became a shareholder, in the following June another report was made, similar in all respects, and containing all the ingredients of fraud and misrepresentation. That is the report of the company of which he is a member; therefore he becomes one of the persons who made the misrepresentation. This is very ingenious, but when examined it comes to nothing. First of all, it assumes the whole proposition in question—it assumes that he must be considered a shareholder; but if he was deceived, he is no shareholder if he repudiates; and if he repudiates, he repudiates ab initio, and was no shareholder at all. . . . . Dodgson's case (3 De G. & S. 85) has been regarded as contradictory, but it is not so. There is an expression of the Vice-Chancellor, that the directors were not agents to commit fraud; but there is nothing to lead us to conjecture what were the representations made—nothing to lead us to think that representations made by the directors, and accepted by the company, are not representations of the company. In the other cases the representations made were by officers of the company, not by the company, or by agents authorised by the company."

Compulsory arbitration under the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, is so different in its origin from arbitration by mutual consent, that we may well expect to find dissimilar effects flowing from it, and dissimilar rules adopted with reference to it. In the one case the Court refers the cause, substituting another tribunal for itself, and compelling the parties to submit to it; in the other the parties agree to submit their differences to the judgment of a third person, whom they select for that purpose, preferring the domestic to the public forum. It has been long recognised, as a consequence from mutual submission to arbitration, that the Courts will not review the judgment of the arbitrator whom the parties have selected in preference to the Courts to decide between them; no erroneous decision of such arbitrator, either upon the facts or the law of the case, is ground for setting aside his award. A question has been raised, arguendo, whether this rule is applicable to awards made under compulsory reference, or whether they should not be treated as decisions of the Court liable to review. In Brown v. Hellaby (26 L. J., Ex., 217) a motion was made to set aside such an award for an error of the arbitrator, and it was urged by counsel that the old rule, that the parties to a reference must abide by the judgment of the arbitrator, rested on their own appointment of him, and cessante ratione cessat lex; that the same principle could not apply to cases of compulsory reference, where the Court appointed the arbitrator; that such a reference was substituted for trial by jury, and was a species of trial; and that the 7th section of the statute, that the proceedings on a reference under the act, as to setting aside the award, &c., should be the same as under any reference before the act, was applicable only to the mode of procedure. The Court, however, declined to interfere, on account of the smallness of the sum disputed, (2*l*. 2*s*.), which would equally have prevented them from disturbing the verdict of a jury, and abstained from expressing any opinion upon the important point thus raised by counsel. On another occasion, however, a distinction of some moment between the two kinds of references was recognised and acted upon. Thus a bill for discovery will lie in the case of a compulsory reference. (The British Shipping Company v. Somes, 3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 883). Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., in delivering judgment on demurrer to the bill, said—"The law before 1854, with reference to proceedings before an arbitrator selected by the parties, has no substantial bearing on these cases of compulsory arbitration. Arbitration of this sort must be looked at simply as a mode which the Legislature has thought fit to point out for bringing an action to a conclusion. It does not at all make them obvious to the derogatory remarks of Lord Eldon in Street v. Rigby, (6 Ves. 821), for the foundation of Lord Eldon's remark was, 'if the parties take relief from a domestic forum, they shall not be allowed to come here for discovery merely.' The reason of that quite ceases to apply when the plaintiff, going to a court of common law, is compelled by the judge of that court to have recourse, not to a private forum, not to friends of their own whom the parties may select, but to a tribunal which the Legislature has thought fit to provide in certain cases for the determination of these cases. The arbitrator represents the delegated authority of the Court of Queen's Bench, or other high Court of common law which has appointed him and deputed its functions to him. The Legislature has said that that high Court may in such cases depute a part of its business; the deputed Court continues a part of the original high Court."

The Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854, (17 & 18 Vict. c. 31), has given rise to several decisions, of which we propose to place a summary before our readers. The object of this statute, as is well known, was to vest in the Court of Common Pleas a power of controlling railway and canal companies, so as to prevent them from inflicting injury upon the public by partiality, undue restriction, or any act opposed to public interests. In the words of Jervis, C. J., it was to place the whole railway system under the control of the Court. (See Simons v. The Great Western Railway Company, 18 C. B. 805; 26 L. J., C. P., 25). Among the questions which have been decided is one which had been much vexed before magistrates, namely, whether railway companies have a right to exclude a public vehicle from their station, when they admit others within it of a similar class? It had been decided that an action could not be maintained for such refusal; (Barker v. The Midland Railway Company, 18 C. B. 46); but the application now was, under the above statute, for an injunction to compel the company to admit the carriage of the applicant within the yard of their station. The rule was moved against the London and South-western Railway Company at the suit of the owner of an omnibus, which ran with passengers and luggage several times daily from Twickenham to meet the trains at the Kingston station. It was the only public conveyance between those places. After it had been running for some time admittance to the yard was refused, which occasioned great inconvenience to passengers, who were in consequence obliged to get out and carry their own luggage a distance of seventy-five feet from the gates to the station. There was plenty of room for the omnibus in the yard, which was used by the public generally for the purpose of coming to or going from the station, either on foot or in carriages, and a public coach and omnibus were admitted daily. No special circumstances being shewn to justify the exclusion, the Court made the rule absolute, enjoining the company to admit the omnibus into the yard at all reasonable times for the purpose of traffic upon and from the railway, and in the same manner and to the same extent as other vehicles of a similar description were admitted for that purpose. (In re Marriott v. The London and South-western Railway Company, 3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 493; 26 L. J., C. P., 154). The grounds of this decision were, that the conduct of the company caused an unreasonable inconvenience to the public, and gave an undue preference and advantage to the other public vehicles; but the learned judges guarded themselves from laying down as a general rule, that a railway company has no right, under any circumstances—e. g. want of sufficient space—to limit the admittance of public vehicles within the area of their stations.

The Court has refused to interfere under the statute because a railway company charged higher fares on one of their branch lines than they charged for equal distances on another; or because they issued third-class return tickets on the one, and not on the other. Nor will it interfere with arrangements respecting the number of trains that stop, or the times at which they stop, at any particular station, unless it is distinctly shewn that such arrangements do not sufficiently provide for the accommodation of the public; and where the company issued third-class tickets to stations a certain distance down the line, the Court refused to enjoin them to issue such tickets to stations beyond that distance. (In re The Caterham Railway Company v. The London and Birmingham Railway Company, 26 L. J., C. P., 161. See also In re Barrett v. The Great Northern Railway Company, Id. 83).

If there are two competing companies having lines from A. to B., and one of them has a continuation from B. to C., and the company having such continuation arrange the departures from B. so as to interfere seriously with the other line, and thereby put the public to inconvenience, and force the traffic to B. over a greater extent of line at a sacrifice of time or cost, the Court will, it seems, interfere. (Dictum per Cockburn, C. J., in Re Barrett, supra).

A covered station is a reasonable accommodation which a railway company is bound to provide for the public. (In re The Caterham Railway Company, supra).

A company is justified in carrying goods for one person at a less rate than that at which they carry the same description of goods for another, if there be circumstances which render the cost to the company of carrying for the former less than the cost of carrying for the latter. (In re Oxlade v. The North-eastern Railway Company, 3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 637; 26 L. J., C. P., 129).

Where, from a desire to introduce the northern coke into Staffordshire, a company made special agreements with different merchants for the carriage of coal and coke at a rate lower than the ordinary charge, it was held not to be a legitimate ground for making such agreements, and that it was giving an undue preference to that traffic. (Ib.)

The Court refused to require a company to provide trucks for the carriage of coal for a merchant who refused to pay demurrage for them at the same rate as was charged to all other merchants under similar circumstances. (Ib.)

In determining the question of undue preference the Court will consider the fair interests of the railway itself; e. g. whether the company may not carry larger quantities, or for longer distances, at lower rates per ton per mile, than smaller quantities, or for shorter distances, so as to derive equal profits to themselves. Where, however, it was clear that they charged one person less than another in order to enable the former to compete with the other, an injunction was granted against the undue preference, although the distances and quantities were unequal; but it was made a part of the terms of the injunction that due regard was to be had to the circumstances, if any, which rendered the cost to the company less in carrying for the one party than for the other. (In re Ransome v. The Eastern Counties Railway Company, 3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 217; 26 L. J., C. P., 91).

With regard to the reasonableness of conditions imposed by railway companies, it should be observed, that by the 7th section of the statute notice given by the company will not protect them, but they may make just and reasonable conditions as to the receiving, forwarding, or delivering goods or animals. It has been held a reasonable condition that they would not be responsible for damage to horses or cattle conveyed by the railway, (Wise v. The Great Western Railway Company, 1 H. & Norm. 63; Pardington v. The South-western Railway Company, Id. 392; 2 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1210), or for loss or damage, from any cause whatsoever, to goods conveyed at a special or mileage rate, (Simons v. The Great Western Railway Company, 18 C. B. 805); and that they would not be liable for loss of market or other delay arising from detention of cheese, (White v. The Great Western Railway Company, 26 L. J., C. P., 158); and, as it seems, that no claim for damage would be allowed unless made within three days after the delivery of the goods, nor for loss unless made within three days of the time that they should have been delivered, (Simons v. The Great Western Railway Company, supra); but a condition, that they would not be liable for the loss, detention, or damage of any package insufficiently packed, was held unreasonable, for it was quite immaterial whether the goods were properly packed or not if the whole package was lost. (Ib.; see also Dunham v. The London and North-western Railway Company, 18 C. B. 826).

The following points of practice have been decided under the act:—

If the rule call on the company to shew cause why they should not act in compliance with the Railway Traffic Act, it is too vague. (In re Marriott, supra).

If moved without costs, it will be made absolute without costs, (Ib.); otherwise with costs. (In re Ransome, supra).

If, however, the rule asks for more than the applicant is entitled to, he will have to pay his own costs, although it may be made absolute in part. (In re Oxlade, supra).

Where moved on wholly insufficient grounds, it will be discharged, with costs. (In re Barrett, supra).

IS A CONDITION OF RE-ENTRY ON AN ASSIGNMENT WITHOUT LICENSE DESTROYED BY AN ACCEPTANCE OF RENT AFTER AN UNAUTHORISED ASSIGNMENT?

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

Sir,—This is a point of considerable importance, and one very likely to occur in conveyancing practice; it is also one on which the prevailing opinion—namely, that such an acceptance of rent would destroy the condition[*]—seems open to very great doubt.

This opinion appears to have arisen from an extra-judicial suggestion of Sir James Mansfield, C. J., in Lloyd v. Crispe, (5 Taunt. 249). The case had come before him at Nisi Prius, when the plaintiff was nonsuited. An application for a rule absolute for a new trial having been granted on the ground of misdirection, the Chief Justice suggested to the plaintiff's counsel that the new trial would probably be of no avail, by reason of a condition of re-entry on an assignment without license having been destroyed by the lessor having accepted rent subsequently.

In 1 Wms. Saund. 288 b, note (d), by Patteson and Williams, JJ., the statement of Lloyd v. Crispe would lead one to infer that the opinion above alluded to was the actual decision in the case. It is as follows:—"When the proviso contains an exception of assignment by will, the executors or legatee cannot therefore assign without license; but when they had done so, and the lessor had accepted rent of their assignee, the condition was held to be waived, and that the assignee might assign without license." In the notes to Dumpor's case (1 Smith's L. C. 33) occurs the following passage, which has been passed over without comment by the very learned editors, Willes, J., and Mr. Keating:—"There is some distinction in respect of waiver between a condition against underletting and one against assignment; for in the former case, if the lessee underlet, and the lessor accept subsequently accruing rent, so as to waive the forfeiture, still if the lessee, after the expiration of that term, make another underlease, the lessor may re-enter; (Doe v. Bliss, 4 Taunt. 735); but if the lessor were, by acceptance of rent, to waive the forfeiture incurred by the lessee's assignment, there would be an end of the condition altogether, exactly as there would be if he had licensed it." (Lloyd v. Crispe, 5 Taunt. 249; 1 Wms. Saund. 288 b, note (d); and see 5 B. & Ad. 781). It has been seen that Lloyd v. Crispe cannot be considered an authority on the point in question, and the note in Wms. Saund. rests on Lloyd v. Crispe. The remarks of Patteson, J., (5 B. & Ad. 781), do point to some distinction between assignment and underletting, in respect of waiver; but it is observable that he was addressing himself to the difference between Dumpor's case (4 Rep. 119 b.) and the case he was then called on to decide, and that he spoke of Dumpor's case as one where the covenant had been waived. On looking at the report by Lord Coke this last remark seems hardly correct, for it is said that "the lessors, by their deed, anno 13 Eliz., licensed the lessee to alien;" from which it is clear that Dumpor's case was not in any sense one of waiver, but one of express license.

It is apprehended that the true distinction in every case is, whether there has been a dispensation with the condition, or a waiver of the breach.

On what sound principle can a distinction be taken between the effect of receipt of rent or other waiver on a condition restraining from underletting and one restraining from assignment? Why is receipt of rent after an unauthorised assignment to be construed as license, but after an unauthorised underletting as waiver?

Even supposing (what is very unusual) that the covenant should be to the effect that the lessee should not assign without license, and the restriction was not by the form of the covenant extended to his assigns, so that there could be but one breach of the covenant, still there would be no more room to contend that on the breach of such a covenant there could be no waiver of the breach as distinguished from release of the condition, than there would be to contend that on the breach of a covenant to do any other single act, such breach could not be waived simply, but that any dependent condition must be deemed to be released.

It does seem that the doctrine of tolerance being tantamount to license in the case of assignment is open to the objection to a similar doctrine in a case of underletting stated by Gibbs, J., in Doe v. Bliss.

The Courts at the present day are certainly disinclined to extend the doctrine of Dumpor's case, and there is no doubt that where they could possibly do so they would construe an act to be one of waiver rather than of license.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, OCTOBER 10, 1857.

THE Act for the Registration of Bills of Sale (17 & 18 Vict. c. 36) is of sufficient importance to warrant us in calling attention to the few decisions which have hitherto been given upon its construction and effect. The first and most material point to be borne in mind respecting this statute is, that its provisions apply only to assignments of personalty, or that which is in the nature of personalty. The deeds mentioned in the act relate to assignments of goods and chattels; but, by sect. 7, goods and chattels include fixtures capable of complete transfer by delivery. Therefore, although a mortgage of land, with the machinery thereon, does not require to be registered, notwithstanding that the machinery consists of trade fixtures, (Mather v. Fraser, 2 Kay & J. 536; 2 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 900), yet an assignment of trade fixtures alone requires registration. (Waterfall and Others v. Penistone, 3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 15). In the latter case the freehold of a mill had been mortgaged to a Mr. Marsh, and for further security the machinery upon the premises was afterwards assigned to him. By a subsequent deed the freeholder assigned to the defendant, subject to the said mortgage, the equity of redemption of the mill and machinery included in the mortgage; and by a later deed, (the 14th August, 1854), assigned to the defendant, to secure a further advance, other machinery then on the premises, which was not included in the former assignments. He also by the same deed further charged with this last advance the equity of redemption in the premises before mortgaged to the defendant. The machinery assigned by this last deed of August, 1854, was affixed to the premises only for the purposes of trade, and the deed treated it as machinery which the assignor had a right to sell distinct from the land. The defendant afterwards took possession of the machinery; the assignor then became bankrupt, and the deed not having been registered, it was held that it was inoperative as against his assignees. Erle, J., in delivering the judgment of the Court, said—"In Hellawell v. Eastwood, (6 Exch. 295), the question, whether the trade machinery there described, which was annexed to the soil, was liable to be distrained, was answered in the affirmative, on the ground, that if the purpose of the annexation was not the permanent improvement of the dwelling, but the more complete use temporarily of the machinery, it was a chattel, and that the intention of the party in the annexation was material to be considered for deciding whether it became parcel of the realty. According to that decision, we hold this machinery to have been a personal chattel within the statute, notwithstanding the annexation to the soil. . . . It was further contended that the result of the whole transaction was equivalent to a mortgage of the premises, with the machinery in question thereon, to the defendant, and so the deed was not a bill of sale, according to the decision in Mather v. Fraser, (supra), in which it was held that a mortgage of land, with the machinery thereon, was not a bill of sale of the machinery within the statute. With that decision we agree, but we think it does not apply to the indenture of the 14th August, 1854, which first created a primary charge on the machinery now in question, distinct from the land, by way of bill of sale, and afterwards created a separate secondary charge on the equity of redemption by another part of the same instrument. It was further suggested that this machinery might have passed to the mortgagee of the freehold as parcel thereof, though annexed after the mortgage; but the tenor of the instrument shews that the parties did not so intend; and trade fixtures, as above described, would not by subsequent annexation become parcel of the freehold, according to Hellawell v. Eastwood, above cited."

In a late number (ante, p. 373) we considered the case of Edwards v. English, (26 L. J., Q. B., 193), which decided that a prior bill of sale, invalid for want of registration, cannot be set up against a subsequent valid bill of sale, in an interpleader issue between the assignee under the second deed and the execution creditor. It would appear from that case, as we then observed, that an unregistered bill of sale is void, not only as against the parties expressly named in the statute, but also as against an assignee of the same goods under a subsequent bill of sale.

With regard to the form of the bill of sale and the affidavit, which are to be registered, the object of the statute is to give notice of the position in life of the assignor, and to facilitate inquiries to that end; therefore a misdescription, or absence of true description, in regard to his occupation, is substantial, and invalidates the security. Where the deed purported to be made by one who described himself as "gentleman," of such a house, the furniture in which was assigned, and it appeared that he was a clerk in the Audit-office, it was held that the misdescription vitiated the bill of sale. (Allen v. Thompson, 1 H. & Norm. 15; 2 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 451). So, where the affidavit omitted any description of the residence or occupation of the assignor, it was held to make the assignment void, although the bill of sale itself contained a sufficient description. (Hatton v. English, 26 L. J., Q. B., 161). Where, however, the affidavit purported to be made by a person who was sufficiently described, and he was also attesting witness to the bill of sale, but the affidavit did not contain any further description of the residence or occupation of the attesting witness as such, it was held sufficient. (Allen v. Thompson, supra).

STAMPS ON COUNTERPARTS AND DUPLICATES OF INSTRUMENTS.

The Commissioners of Inland Revenue have put a construction upon the provision in the stat. 13 & 14 Vict. c. 97, as to the stamping of counterparts of deeds and other instruments, which occasions much inconvenience, and seems to us to be contrary to the express terms as well as the intention of the act. They refuse (except in the case of a lease) to stamp a deed as the counterpart of another deed produced to them duly stamped, unless the counterpart is not only an exact copy of the principal deed down to the concluding words of the testimonium, but is also actually executed by every party who has executed or is named as a party to the principal deed.

The general provision respecting counterparts and duplicates in the stat. 13 & 14 Vict. c. 97, is new. The Stamp Act, 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, contained some special provisions, differently expressed, and applicable to particular instruments only.

Under the head "APPRENTICESHIP AND CLERKSHIP" it was provided, "And when there shall be duplicates or two parts of any such indenture, &c., each part shall be charged with the duty before mentioned in all cases where the same shall not exceed 35*s*., and where the same shall exceed that sum, only one part shall be charged with the said ad valorem duty, and the other part shall be charged with a duty of 1*l*. 15*s*., . . . and the part bearing the lower duty shall belong to and be kept by the master or mistress, and be received in evidence accordingly." But this did not extend to counterparts or duplicates of articles of clerkship to attornies, &c., which were simply charged with a stamp of 1*l*. 15*s*., there being in the regulations concerning the admission of such clerks as attornies, &c. sufficient provision against evasion of the duty.

Under the title "CONVEYANCE" it was provided, that "when there shall be duplicates of any deed or instrument chargeable with the said ad valorem duty exceeding 2*l*., one of them only shall be charged therewith, and the other or others shall be charged with the ordinary duty on deeds or instruments of the same kind, not upon a sale; and on the whole being produced, duly stamped as hereby required, the latter shall also be stamped with a particular stamp for denoting or testifying the payment of the said ad valorem duty." There was a similar provision under the title "MORTGAGE."

Duplicates of deeds of EXCHANGE OF PARTITION were expressly charged with the same duties as the originals.

In the case of a LEASE charged with a duty exceeding 1*l*. the counterpart or duplicate was charged with a duty of 1*l*. 10*s*., without any provision for affixing a denoting stamp to the duplicate.

All these provisions were virtually repealed by the following general provision in the schedule to the stat. 13 & 14 Vict. c. 97:—

"DUPLICATE or COUNTERPART of any deed or instrument of any description whatever, chargeable with any stamp duty or duties either under this schedule or any other act or acts now in force.

"Where such stamp duty or duties chargeable as aforesaid (exclusive of progressive duty) shall not amount to the sum of 5*s*., the same duty or duties as shall be chargeable on the original deed or instrument, including the progressive duty thereon, if any.

"And where the same (exclusive as aforesaid) shall amount to the sum of 5*s*. and upwards.

"And where &c. (progressive duty of 2*s*. 6*d*. per 1080 words).

"Provided always, that in such latter case the duplicate or counterpart shall not be available unless stamped with a particular stamp for denoting or testifying the payment of the full and proper stamp duty on the original deed or instrument, which said particular stamp shall be impressed upon such duplicate or counterpart on the same being produced, together with the original deed or instrument, and on the whole being duly executed, and duly stamped in all other respects."

The General Stamp Act, 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, was drawn with consummate foresight and skill, and contained scarcely a superfluous provision, or even word. The recent acts relating to stamps are, in detail and execution, not only much inferior to that act, but are below the average of Government bills of the present day. The proviso which has just been cited is useless and vexatious. The General Stamp Act left it to the option of the parties whether they would have the denoting stamp impressed or not. A duplicate of a deed clearly would not be received in evidence under the lower stamp unless the due stamping of the original was proved, either by producing the original or by the denoting stamp. A counterpart, bearing the counterpart stamp, might or might not be received in evidence without such proof, according to the nature of the case. A counterpart of articles of apprenticeship, coming from the proper custody, might safely be admitted to be a counterpart. A counterpart of a lease, not being executed by the lessor, can only be a counterpart. A counterpart of any other instrument might or might not bear intrinsic evidence of the fact, according to its nature; and in the absence of such intrinsic evidence, the denoting stamp, or other proof of the due stamping of the original, would be necessary.

These distinctions were noticed by the judges in the case of Doe d. Wright v. Smith, (8 Ad. & El. 255), where the lessor of the plaintiff had given the defendant notice that he might inspect, and would be required to admit, the "counterpart of a lease from E. T. to the defendant, dated the 26th December, 1829." A judge's order to admit the document was taken by consent.

At the trial, an instrument, bearing the duplicate or counterpart stamp, answering to the description in the notice to admit in all respects, except that it was executed by the lessor, was produced, and objected to by the defendant on the ground that it appeared to be a lease, and was insufficiently stamped as a lease, and there was no proof of the existence of an original lease duly stamped. The objection was overruled on the ground that the defendant, having had the opportunity of inspecting the document, and having admitted it as a counterpart, could not now object that it was a duplicate. Littledale, J., said, "This is not a counterpart, because it bears the seal of the lessor. A counterpart is properly executed by the grantee only. If the instrument is executed by both parties, it is either the only document that exists or a duplicate; but to use it as a duplicate you must shew that there was an original properly stamped. This at least would have been the course of observation if no admission had been made."

As might have been expected, the inconvenience of the new regulation was soon found to be intolerable in the class of cases which most frequently came under its operation, and a special provision was made in favour of counterparts of leases by the 12th section of the stat. 16 & 17 Vict. c. 59, which provides, that, "notwithstanding anything contained in the said act, the counterpart of any lease of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, being duly stamped with the said stamp duty of 5s., or any higher duty, (exclusive of progressive duty), and not being executed or signed by or on the behalf of any lessor or grantor, shall be available as a counterpart, without being stamped with a particular stamp for denoting or testifying the payment of the stamp duty chargeable on the original lease."

Duplicates of every kind, and counterparts of all instruments liable to stamp duty, except leases, still require the denoting stamp, and that the officers at Somerset House refuse to impress on any counterpart, stating that the word "counterpart" in the schedule to the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 97, title "DUPLICATE or COUNTERPART," means "duplicate;" although their legal adviser, Mr. Tilsley, seems to be aware that it has a different meaning, for in the supplement to his able treatise on the Stamp Laws he observes that the propriety of the provision as to the denoting stamp is obvious, "more particularly in the case of duplicates." The construction adopted by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue is founded, we are told, on the requisition that both instruments shall be produced "duly executed;" but we cannot understand how this helps them. An instrument is "duly executed" when it is executed by the person intended to execute it; and the condition was imposed probably with the design to prevent fraud which might be committed by procuring a mere ingrossment to be stamped on payment of the lower duty, and afterwards adding fresh matter to it before execution. This is satisfied by having the deed executed by a single party; and this is all the protection that can be required, and, indeed, all that even the present practice at Somerset House can secure; for under the present practice, when parties wish to have a set of deeds stamped as original and counterparts, without each being executed by all the parties, all that is necessary is to describe the parties after this fashion—"This indenture, made &c. between A. B. of the one part, and the several other persons whose names and seals are hereunto subscribed and set of the other part;" and then, having procured all the parts to be executed by A. B. and C. D., and by them only, present them for stamping as "original and duplicates," which, we presume, could not be refused. After this each of the respective parts may be "duly executed" by the persons only who are intended to execute it.

It is perfectly clear, however, that the authorities at Somerset House have put a wrong construction on the act, and it is time that they should be set right by an appeal to the Court of Exchequer. The point is of considerable importance, because it is often found convenient, when a deed has to be executed by many persons who reside in different parts of the country or abroad, to send to each party by post a counterpart for execution by him only, which, when returned so executed, ought, on production of the original duly stamped, to be stamped as a counterpart.

Since the above observations were in type we have been informed that in the case which suggested them the Commissioners of Inland Revenue have given way. The circumstances, which seem to involve the concession of the whole principle contended for, were these:—A deed of arrangement, under the "six-sevenths" clause of the Bankrupt-law Consolidation Act, between a firm in London and its creditors, many of whom were foreigners scattered over the continent, was prepared, and as it was impossible to send the deed on its travels, so as to be executed by the requisite number of creditors in time, it was arranged, in order to avoid the uncertainty attending powers of attorney, and the heavy expense in stamps, (1*l.* 10*s.* for each creditor), that a short deed of accession to the principal deed should be prepared, lithographed, and sent by post in duplicate to the several creditors, with information as to the contents of the principal deed, and instructions to execute and return the duplicate deed of accession. The duplicates were executed accordingly, but when they were taken to the Stamp Office, with a request to stamp one of them as a principal and the others as duplicates, the answer was returned that it had been repeatedly decided there, that unless all the deeds were each fully executed by all parties, so as to be fac-similes of each other, they must all be stamped as independent deeds. We are glad to hear, however, that, after hearing an argument against their established practice, the authorities consented to affix the duplicate and denoting stamps. We have pleasure in adding that in several other instances which have come to our knowledge the legal advisers of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue have of late shewn a readiness to correct or relax their rules when proved to be erroneous or harsh.

G. S.

BRITISH JURISDICTION IN TURKEY.

BY an Order in Council published in the London Gazette of the 2nd instant, after reciting that by the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 94, her Majesty may exercise any jurisdiction which her Majesty hath within any country or place out of her Majesty's dominions, in the same and as ample a manner as if her Majesty had acquired such power or jurisdiction by the cession or conquest of territory, and that her Majesty hath power and jurisdiction in the dominions of the Sublime Ottoman Porte, it is ordered, (amongst other things)—

1. That the power and jurisdiction hitherto exercised by her Majesty's Consul-General at Constantinople, so far as the same relates to the repression and punishment of crimes and offences committed within the dominions of the Sublime Ottoman Porte, and to the judicial settlement and determination of all manner of differences, contentions, suits, and variances that might or should happen to arise between British subjects, or between British subjects and the subjects of the Sublime Ottoman Porte, or between British subjects and the subjects of any foreign power, shall be vested in an officer who shall represent the Consul-General, and be called "the judge of the Supreme Consular Court of Constantinople," and such officer shall hold, by special commission from her Majesty, the appointment of vice-consul.

4. That the judge of the said Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople, acting in the representative capacity aforesaid, shall have full power and authority to cause to be apprehended and brought before him any British subject charged with having committed any crime or offence within the dominions of the Sublime Ottoman Porte, or within any British ship being within 100 miles of the coast of Turkey, or within any ship or vessel on the high seas within the same limits, not being lawfully entitled to claim the protection of any flag of any state or nation, and having inquired of, tried, and determined according to the practice of English criminal courts, except where such practice is modified or altered by the provisions of this or any future Order, any charge which may be brought before him, save and except such as may be of a capital nature, to sentence the party convicted to transportation for life, or for any less term, or, in lieu thereof, to penal servitude, according to the provisions of the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 99, or to deportation, or to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for a term not exceeding two years, or to the payment of a fine not exceeding 500*l.* sterling: provided always, that no act shall be deemed or taken to be a crime or offence, rendering the person committing the same liable to punishment under this Order, unless it be such that if done or committed in England the party so doing or committing it would be liable to punishment in England according to English law, or unless it be an act made liable to punishment by some previous Order in Council applicable to the dominions of the Sublime Porte.

5. That if the crime or offence whereof any person, being a British subject, may be accused before such judge, shall appear to be of a capital nature, then, having taken the depositions in writing and on oath, and in such form and with such ceremony as the party deposing may declare to be binding on his conscience, of all such witnesses as may be competent to give evidence as to the guilt or innocence of the party so charged, and having bound over such witnesses, being British subjects, in their own recognisances, to appear and give such evidence when and wherever they may be called upon so to do, it shall be lawful for such judge to send such accused party to England or Malta, or, if an Ionian, to Corfu, there to be tried according to the law and practice of the criminal courts in these countries.

6. That the judge, on any occasion of sending a prisoner to England, Malta, or Corfu, shall observe the provisions of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 94.

7. That if the crime or offence whereof any person, being a British subject, may be accused before the judge of the Supreme Consular Court shall be above the degree of misdemeanour, then such judge shall summon, by warrant under the seal of the Consular Court, six indifferent British subjects of good repute, residing within the district of the said Court, to serve as jurymen upon the trial of such accused person, in the same way, and subject to the same form, observances, right of challenge, and penalties, so far as circumstances will admit, as persons serving on juries in England; and such judge shall, with the assistance of such jury, proceed to try the accused in the same manner and according to the same forms, as nearly as may be, as is now practised in England upon the trial of parties charged with criminal offences.

8. That it shall be lawful for the judge, if to him it shall seem fit, to cause any person convicted before him of any crime, over and above any fine or imprisonment which may be awarded to such person, to be sent out of the dominions of the Sublime Ottoman Porte, in the manner pointed out by her Majesty by her Order in Council of the 19th June, 1844, notwithstanding the crime laid to the charge of such person may be the first of which he has been convicted before the judge.

9. That the judge shall have power in a civil suit to examine on oath, or in such form and with such ceremony as he may declare to be binding on his conscience, any witness who may appear before him, and shall have power, on the application of any party in the said suit, to issue a compulsory order for the attendance of any person, being a British subject, who may be competent to give evidence in such suit; and any British subject, having been duly served with any such compulsory order, and with a reasonable notice of the day of the hearing of such suit, shall, on his wilful default to appear as a witness at the hearing of such suit, be punished with a fine not exceeding 100*l.* sterling, or with imprisonment for a period not exceeding thirty days, at the discretion of the said judge; and every witness, being a British subject, so examined as aforesaid, in case of wilful or false testimony, may be convicted of and punished for the crime of wilful and corrupt perjury; and the judge shall, when the circumstances of the case appear to justify it, and when he thinks fit, order that the expenses of a witness, on his appearing to give evidence, shall be defrayed either by the party at whose application he shall have been ordered to attend, or by the party against whom such evidence has been given.

With an Appendix, containing the Common-law Procedure Act of Will. 4, the recent Acts on Evidence, the New Rules to Michaelmas Vacation, 1854, and an Introduction. By W. F. FINLASON, Esq., Barrister at Law.

"This is, in our judgment, a most excellent and carefully written book. The equity powers given to the Common-law Courts are admirably done. The views taken by Mr. Finlason of the practical bearing and operation of these acts are remarkably shrewd and suggestive. Such men, and their editions of statutes, tend very greatly to improve the laws they expound, and powerfully assist the objects of the Legislature."—Law Magazine, Feb. 1855.

"We have now before us the work of Mr. Finlason, whose previous labours in expounding other statutes entitle him to the favourable consideration of the Profession. The notes to the various new enactments are very full and valuable."—Legal Observer, Jan. 6, 1855.

⁂ In the debate on the proposed consolidation of the Statutes, on the 9th February, 1854, Lord Campbell said, "that the Statutes at Large extended to about fifty volumes folio, but all the Statutes which were usually required by lawyers for reference might be found in three octavo volumes compiled by his learned friend Mr. Welsby. When he (Lord Campbell) was upon the bench he always had this work by him, and no Statutes were ever referred to by the Bar which he could not find in it."

This important Work will be continued annually, by an Edition of the Statutes, arranged on a similar plan, with a full Index, being published shortly after the close of each Session. Edited by E. Beavan, Esq. Three Supplements are now ready, containing the Statutes of 1854, price 9*s*. 6*d*.; 1855, price 9*s*. 6*d*.; and 1856, price 6*s*., sewed.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, OCTOBER 17, 1857.

A CASE decided last year by Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., of rather a singular character, deserves, we think, some further consideration. The case alluded to is that of Harris v. Watkins, (2 Kay & J. 473). There the testator, by his will in 1844, after making certain specific devises and bequests, gave, devised, and bequeathed to his wife all the rest and residue of his real and personal estate and effects absolutely, and appointed her executrix of his will; and the testator declared that the devises and bequests thereby made to his wife should be taken and considered in lieu and discharge of all money which he had borrowed out of and forming part of the trust monies mentioned in the settlement made on his marriage with her. Three days after the death of the testator, in 1848, his wife died, without having proved his will, and without having possessed herself of any of his real or personal effects. According to the evidence it was not clear that it was for the disadvantage of the widow to retain the estate devised to her, and to give up the debt due from her husband, which upon his death had become her absolute property. It was held by Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., in a contest between the heir-at-law and the personal representative of the widow, that the Court could not presume a disclaimer by her, that consequently her heir was entitled to the estate, and that the debt claimed by her administrator as due from the testator on account of the trust funds which he had borrowed was discharged. His Honor, when the counsel for the administrator of the wife argued that the Court had never presumed election by a deceased person in such a case, said, "that it was not so much whether the Court would presume election as whether it would presume a rejection of the devise." In giving judgment his Honor said, "Where an estate is devised by will, the estate passes to the devisee by virtue of the devise; and unless there be a disclaimer by the devisee, shewing an intention on his part not to take, the estate remains in him. Here the testator has not required any act to be done by the devisee; he has imposed nothing in the nature of a condition to be performed by her previously to the vesting of the estate. . . . . The estate, therefore, vested in the devisee; and the devisee, by the mere circumstance of its so vesting in her, discharged the testator's estate from all money borrowed by him out of and forming part of the trust monies mentioned in the marriage settlement. This is the result, provided the devisee did not disclaim. In this case there is no evidence of any disclaimer, and the only question is, whether, having regard to the circumstances of the devisee's death, and to the relative values of the estate devised and of the debts to be discharged, the Court is called upon to presume a disclaimer. Whether circumstances might not exist under which the Court would be justified in presuming a disclaimer is a question of some nicety. I am not aware of any authority upon the point, but I apprehend that in a strong case—for instance, if a testator devised real estate worth 10,000*l.* only, and declared that it should be taken in lieu and discharge of debts to the amount of 20,000*l.*—in such a case, it being manifest that it would be for the disadvantage of the devisee to retain the estate upon the terms mentioned in the will, the Court, in the event of the donee dying under circumstances like the present, would, as between his real and personal representatives, struggle hard to presume a disclaimer; but when it is not manifest that it would be for the disadvantage of the devisee to retain the estate upon the terms proposed by the testator, the ground of that presumption fails, and the presumption does not arise."

With great deference to the learned judge, it appears to us that the conclusion at which he arrived cannot be supported upon sound principles, and that in fact it rests upon a mere fallacy. It is true, as observed by his Honor, that the estate devised by the will passed to the devisee by virtue of the devise—it was the testator's own property, and he had power to devise it; but when we come to the next step in his reasoning, viz. "that the devisee, by the mere circumstance of the estate so vesting in her, discharged the testator's estate from all the money borrowed by him out of and forming part of the trust monies mentioned in the marriage settlement," we must beg leave altogether to dissent from him. The borrowed money was the property of the trustees of the settlement and his wife; and it appears to be introducing quite a new principle in English law to say that the debtor, independent of the doctrine of election, (which the Vice-Chancellor, it will be observed, said was not applicable to this case), can, by leaving property of his own to the creditor, discharge his own estate from the debt, or, in other words, bequeath the debt to others.

At law, whatever might be the effect in equity, the mere fact of the devisee not disclaiming the devise would not have the effect of discharging the estate of the testator from the debt due to the trustees of the settlement. Suppose they had commenced an action against the personal representative of the testator, would it have been any defence to the action to plead the devise to his wife? It appears to us that it would not—that, in fact, the legal right to recover the debt remained in the trustees of the settlement, and the beneficial interest in the wife. The learned Vice-Chancellor seems to have thought, that because the legal interest in the devised property passed to the wife, it was necessarily to be assumed that she gave up her own property, unless a disclaimer could be presumed. But in cases where equity puts in force the doctrine of election, the legal interest in the testator's own property passes to the person to whom he devises or bequeaths it. The mere vesting of the legal estate, therefore, in the devisee constituted no valid objection to the application of the doctrine of election.

It seems to us that the principles of the doctrine of election, and not the novel and certainly startling doctrine of disclaimer, were applicable to this case. Suppose the testator had bequeathed the debt due to the trustees of the settlement and his wife to A., and devised the estate to his wife, according to the ordinary principles of election the wife would have been entitled to elect between the devised estate and the debt, and would have been allowed sufficient time to ascertain their relative values, nor would she have been concluded by merely equivocal acts. Under such circumstances, if, as in the case under consideration, she had done no acts from which election could be presumed, her personal representative, upon whom the beneficial interest in the debt had devolved, would be entitled to it absolutely, or would be entitled to elect in the same manner as the wife might, and would have been compelled to, have done, had she lived longer. If the wife's personal representative elected to retain the debt, then A. would have been entitled to compensation out of the devised estate.

The case of Harris v. Watkins, in substance, only differs from the case put in this circumstance, that in the latter case election arises by implication—in the former from the express words of the testator. The decision, we submit, should be in both cases the same, viz. in favour of the personal representative of the wife. A decision to the contrary enables one person to divert the property of another from one class of his representatives to another, in a manner, perhaps, quite contrary to his wishes, and certainly contrary to the course of succession marked out by the law.

Then, again, the doctrine relative to the presumption of disclaimer seems to us to be far from satisfactory. The relative values of estates ought not to affect the judgment of the Court, for non constat that the pretium affectionis might not far outweigh, in the estimation of a person, the market value. Mere value, therefore, as a test of presumed disclaimer, seems, in some cases at any rate, to be very insufficient. In the case put by the Vice-Chancellor, his Honor evidently is aware of the difficulties to which the principles of his decision might give rise if carried out to their full extent, for he does not venture to say that the Court could presume a disclaimer, unless "in a strong case," when the Court would "struggle hard to presume a disclaimer," as in the case where the devised estate was worth 10,000*l*., which the testator declares is to be taken in lieu and discharge of debts to the amount of 20,000*l*. But where is the line to be drawn? How gross must be the difference of value before the Court commences its exercitations to save the confiscation of the debt, or, at any rate, so much of it as is in excess of the value of the estate? Would the Court, where the debts amounted to 20,000*l*., presume a disclaimer if the estate bequeathed in lieu of them was worth only 10,000*l*., but refuse to do so if the estate was worth 15,000*l*., or 19,000*l*., or some intermediate sum? The consequence of the refusal would be to allow the debtor to repudiate the payment of a certain amount of his debt, contrary to the wishes of the personal representatives of the creditor. In reality the decision in such a case should be altogether independent of the question of value, which evidently leads to great and often insurmountable difficulties. The Court should not take upon itself to determine, from the supposed value of the respective properties, what should be determined solely by the intention, either express or implied, of the person most interested, viz. the party, or the representative of the party, who is called upon to give up his own property in lieu of other property conferred upon him. In fine, as we have before observed, we cannot but think that to such cases as Harris v. Watkins the doctrine of election, and not the doctrine of disclaimer, is applicable.

BRITISH JURISDICTION IN TURKEY.

(Concluded from p. 400).

10. That it shall be lawful for the judge from time to time to establish rules of practice to be observed in proceedings before the said judge, such rules to be, as far as possible, in conformity with those which are established in the county courts of England, regard being had to the difference of local circumstances and long-established custom, and to make regulations for defraying the expenses of witnesses in such proceedings, and the cost of criminal prosecutions; and also to establish rates of fees to be taken in regard to civil suits heard and determined before the judge; and it shall be lawful for the judge to enforce by seizure and sale of goods, or, if there be no goods, by imprisonment, the payment of such established fees, and of such expenses as may be adjudged against the parties, or either of them: provided always, that a table specifying the rates of fees to be so taken shall be affixed and kept exhibited in the public office of the said Consular Court.

11. That it shall be lawful for the judge from time to time, and as he shall think fit, to order the observance, by all the consuls holding consular courts within the dominions of the Sublime Ottoman Porte, of such rules of practice in the proceedings before them as he shall in that behalf establish.

12. That all rules and regulations heretofore made and continuing unrepealed, or to be hereafter made by the judge as aforesaid, shall forthwith be printed, and a copy of the same be affixed, and kept affixed and exhibited, in some conspicuous place in the public office of the judge, and printed copies of the said rules and regulations shall be provided by the judge, and sold at a price not exceeding 5s. for each copy; and for the purpose of convicting any person offending against the said rules and regulations, and for all other purposes of law whatsoever, a printed copy of the said rules and regulations, certified under the hand of the judge and seal of the court to be a true copy thereof, shall be taken as conclusive evidence of such rules and regulations, and no penalty shall be incurred or shall be enforced for the breach of any such rules or regulations to be hereafter made until the same shall have been so affixed and exhibited for one calendar month in the court of the consular district within which the breach of such rules or regulations shall be alleged to have been committed.

13. That it shall be lawful for the judge to promote the settlement of any suit of a civil nature by amicable agreement between the parties, and, with the consent of the several parties, to refer the decision of any such suit to one or more arbitrators, and to take security from the parties that they will be bound by the result of such reference; and the award of such arbitrator or arbitrators shall be to all intents and purposes deemed to be a judgment or sentence of the judge in such suit, and shall be entered and recorded as such, and shall have the like effect and operation, and shall be enforced accordingly, and shall not be open to appeal: and it is further ordered, that in cases of assault it shall be lawful for the judge to promote reconciliation between the parties, upon such terms, either of payment of compensation or otherwise, as he shall think fit, and to order the proceedings thereupon to be stayed.

14. That it shall be lawful for the judge to enforce his decision against a British subject, in any suit of a civil nature, by distress or imprisonment, in like manner as a decision of the courts of law in England in a civil suit is enforced.

15. That all fines and penalties imposed under this Order may be levied by distress and seizure and sale of ships and goods and chattels; and no bill of sale, mortgage, or transfer of property, made after the apprehension of a party, or with a view to security in regard to crimes or offences committed or to be committed, shall avail to defeat any of the provisions of this Order.

16. That it shall be lawful for the judge to hear and determine any suit of a civil nature which may be brought before him in the Supreme Consular Court of Constantinople, on appeal from the decision made by any consul, with or without the aid of assessors; and such consul, on notice of the intention of either party to the suit to appeal from his decision, shall forthwith furnish the judge with a report of the case, with the notes taken by him of the evidence adduced at the trial, together with a copy of the judgment delivered by the said consul: provided always, that notice of such appeal shall have been given within the time limited by such rules and regulations as the judge may establish under the 10th article of this Order; and further, that the party appealing shall have in all other respects complied with such rules.

17. That in any case in which a consul shall have heard and determined a suit in the presence and with the assistance of assessors, in which such assessors, or either of them, shall dissent from the decision of the consul, the consul shall enter the fact of such dissent, and the grounds thereof, in the minutes of the proceedings, and such decision shall, in the event of no appeal being entered as aforesaid, be submitted to the judge for revision, in the same manner as if such decision had been made the subject of an appeal by either of the parties to the suit.

18. That in an appeal to the judge from the decision of a consul it shall not be open to either party to adduce any further evidence than that which has been laid before the consul, and that a party shall not be required to appear personally to prosecute an appeal or support a sentence, unless specially required by the judge to do so: provided always, that in all appeals from the decision of a consul it shall be lawful for a party to allege facts essential to the issue of the suit which have come to his knowledge subsequently to the decision of the consul, and to produce evidence in support of such facts: and provided also, that in an appeal to the Supreme Consular Court it shall moreover be lawful for the judge to admit any further legal evidence besides that adduced before the consul, on its being established to the satisfaction of the said Supreme Court, by oath or affidavit, that the party desiring to produce such further evidence was ignorant of the existence of such evidence, or was taken by surprise at the hearing before the consul, or was unable to produce it before the consul after due and reasonable diligence and exertion on his part in that behalf, or where, under the circumstances of the case, it shall appear to the said Supreme Court that further evidence ought to be received.

19. That her Majesty's consuls resident within the dominions of the Sublime Ottoman Porte shall every six months deliver to the judge of the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople a full and faithful report of every cause, civil and criminal, which may have been brought before such consuls, in such form and with such particulars as the judge may, in the rules and regulations to be by him framed under the 10th article of this Order, think fit to require.

20. That in all cases in which a British subject shall have been sentenced to be sent out of the dominions of the Sublime Ottoman Porte, as provided in articles 5, 6, and 8 of this Order, the consul so sentencing him shall forthwith report such sentence of deportation, with the grounds of his decision, to the Supreme Consular Court; and it shall be lawful for the judge, if he shall consider that any such act of deportation inflicts upon the party a severer punishment than his offence has deserved, to vary or remit such punishment in such way as to him shall seem fit.

21. That if either party to a suit of a civil nature before the judge shall be dissatisfied with the decision given by such judge, it shall be lawful for such party, within fifteen days, to give to the judge notice of his intention to appeal; and such appeal shall be made by petition to her Majesty, subject to such rules as the judge shall make in the rules and regulations which he shall, under article 10 of the present Order, establish; and such appeal shall be decided by the Judicial Committee of her Majesty's Privy Council, upon a written statement by both parties to the suit, together with the judge's notes of the evidence adduced at the trial, and his judgment therein: provided always, that the subject-matter of such suit is of the value of 1000*l.* sterling, and that the party appealing shall have given security, to the satisfaction of the judge, that such party shall abide by the decision to be given by the Court of Appeal.

22. That the judge shall, in the exercise of his discretion, and upon the petition of either of the parties to a suit, permit such party to appeal, in the same way and subject to the same conditions as in article 21, hereinbefore mentioned, in respect of suits the subject-matter of which shall be under the value of 1000*l.*: provided that such party shall give such security as the judge shall direct to abide by the decision of the said Court, or shall conditionally perform the judgment given by the judge in the first instance.

23. That it shall be lawful for the judge or consul of the district within which the party sued shall be found in like manner to hear and determine any suit of a civil nature, arising within any part of the dominions of the Sublime Ottoman Porte, instituted by a British subject against a subject of the Sublime Ottoman Porte, or against a subject or citizen of a foreign state in amity with her Majesty: provided that the defendant in such suit shall consent to submit to his jurisdiction, and give sufficient security that he will abide by the decision of the judge or consul, or, in case of appeal from the decision of the consul, by that of the judge, and will pay such damages and expenses as the judge or consul shall order; and if either or any party in such suit shall be dissatisfied with the decision given by such consul, it shall be lawful for such party within fifteen days to give to the consul notice of appeal to the judge; and the proceedings in such a suit, or in an appeal arising therefrom, shall be conformable to and under the same conditions as the proceedings in a suit, or in an appeal arising therefrom, in which a British subject is the defendant, and a subject of the Sublime Ottoman Porte, or a subject or citizen of a foreign state in amity with her Majesty, is the plaintiff.

24. That whenever it shall be necessary for the judge, acting as the representative of the Consul-General, to communicate with the Government of the Sublime Ottoman Porte, whether in the way of complaint against any matter or thing done or neglected to be done by any agent or officer of the said Government, or by way of remonstrance, or for any other purpose, such communication shall be made under the seal of the Consular Court, through her Majesty's ambassador at the said Porte, and through his interposition, and not otherwise; and her Majesty's ambassador shall thereupon, if he shall think fit, make such communication, or in case her Majesty's ambassador shall consider it undesirable to make such communication, then such ambassador shall state his reasons in writing, for the information of her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and transmit the same, together with a copy of the communication itself, and of the reasons given by the judge for requesting the same to be made, to the said Secretary of State.

25. That whenever any British subject shall, within the district of the said Consular Court of Constantinople, become bankrupt or insolvent, or unable or refuse to pay his just debts, it shall be lawful for the judge of the Consular Court, on the petition of any creditor, to cite such person to appear before him for the purpose of answering such questions touching his estate, both real and personal, as such judge shall think fit; and if such person shall neglect to appear when so summoned, it shall be lawful for the judge to issue a warrant, under the seal of the said Court, for his apprehension, and cause him to be taken into custody; and upon his so appearing he shall be proceeded against in the said Consular Court in the same way, so far as circumstances will admit, as if he were within the jurisdiction of the courts of bankruptcy or insolvency in England; and such judge shall, for the purposes aforesaid, possess and have all the powers, authority, and jurisdiction of the commissioners of insolvency or bankruptcy in England.

26. That it shall be lawful for the judge to hear and decide all cases of appeal in bankruptcy or insolvency which shall be brought, either by the petitioning creditor of any bankrupt, or by the bankrupt himself, against the decision of any consul sitting in bankruptcy or insolvency, in the same way as such judge shall hear and decide all other cases of appeal under the 16th and 17th articles of this Order.

27. That in the event of any question of law or fact, or of mixed law and fact, arising out of the administration of any estate of a deceased British subject within the dominions of the Sublime Ottoman Porte, it shall be lawful for the Consul-General, or other consular officer under whose authority and direction such estate is being administered, to direct the parties interested in such estate, and raising such question as aforesaid, to prepare a special case, according to the rules and regulations to be laid down by the judge under article 10 of this Order, for his decision and direction, and such judge shall thereupon make such order in the matter as he shall think fit.

28. That a minute of the proceedings in every case heard and determined before the judge, or before any consul, in pursuance of this or any other Order, shall be drawn up and be signed by the judge or consul, and shall, in cases where assessors are present, be open for the inspection of such assessors, and for their signature if they shall therein concur; and such minute, together with the depositions of the witnesses or notes of the evidence taken at such trial by the judge or consul, shall be preserved in the public office of the said judge or consul, and a copy of every such minute shall be transmitted by the judge or consul, in such form as shall hereafter be determined, to her Majesty's Chief Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs every six months.

29. That it shall be lawful for every consul within the dominions of the Sublime Ottoman Porte to execute the writs and orders issuing from the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople, and take security from each and every party named in such writ or order for his appearance in person or by his attorney, and in default of such security, or when specially ordered by the said Court, to send such party to Constantinople in the manner pointed out in the 7th article of the Order in Council of the date of the 19th June, 1844.

30. That any suit or action brought against the judge or consul in any Consular Court by reason of anything done under the authority and in execution of the power or jurisdiction of her Majesty intrusted to him or them by this or any other Order, or in execution of any power or jurisdiction heretofore customarily exercised by any of her Majesty's consuls or officers on her behalf, shall be commenced or prosecuted within six months after he or they shall have been within the jurisdiction of the said Court, and not otherwise; and the defendant in every such action or suit shall be entitled to the benefit of the provisions made, with respect to defendants in actions or suits, in stats. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 44, and 6 & 7 Vict. c. 94.

31. That all fees, penalties, fines, and forfeitures levied under this or any other Order, save and except such fees as may be raised by a per-centage on the estates of bankrupts or insolvents, or in respect of the administration of the estate of deceased persons, or of a deposit of monies with any consular officer, shall be paid to the public account, and be applied in diminution of the public expenditure on account of the consular service in the Levant.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, OCTOBER 24, 1857.

THE defendant in an action at law may, as a general rule, place his own estimate upon the amount of his liability, and, by bringing it into court, expose his adversary to the risk of having to pay all subsequent costs, unless he ultimately recover a large sum. The only exceptions named in the Common-law Procedure Act, 1852, (sect. 70), are the following:—Actions for assault, false imprisonment, libel, slander, malicious arrest or prosecution, criminal conversation, and seduction. With regard to these statutory exceptions it should be observed, that the first has been held not to include an action for an assault upon the plaintiff's son, (Newton v. Holford, 6 Q. B. 921), and therefore money may be paid into court in such an action. Also, in actions for libel published in a newspaper or other periodical publication, money may be paid into court if the defendant also plead that the libel was inserted without actual malice, and without gross negligence, and that a full apology for the libel was inserted at the earliest opportunity, (6 & 7 Vict. c. 96, s. 2; and see 8 & 9 Vict. c. 75); and independently of the above statutes, there are several statutory provisions expressly allowing money to be paid into court*. Thus, in actions against justices for acts done in the execution of their office, they may pay money into court; and where they have tendered amends before action, they may avail themselves of it without paying money into court. (11 & 12 Vict. c. 44, s. 11). In all other cases of tender, however, the money must be brought into court. There is a class of cases in which the plaintiff is entitled to have the specific subject-matter of his claim, and not merely its equivalent in money, and in such cases his right is not to be defeated by payment into court. Thus, money cannot be paid into court in actions of ejectment, or to the claim for the goods themselves in actions of detinue. (Allan v. Dunn, 26 L. J., Ex., 185). In the latter action, however, it may be paid to the damages for the detention of the goods. (See Crossfield v. Such, 8 Exch. 159). Where the plaintiff is entitled to have his judgment stand as security for a larger sum than that which is sought in the particular action, as in claims founded upon bonds under the 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 11, money cannot be paid into court, for such payment could not be pleaded to the future breaches. (The Bishop of London v. M'Neil, 9 Exch. 490; 18 Jur., part 1, p. 314; England v. Watson, 9 M. & W. 333).

It is sometimes a matter of some difficulty to determine the precise effect of paying money into court as an admission of the cause of action, but we think the following rules may be deduced from the cases. In actions ex contractu, if paid in to special counts, every material averment therein is admitted, viz. the whole of the contract and the breaches as alleged, and the defendant cannot prove, in mitigation of damages, any fact which would be an answer to the action. (See Perren v. The Monmouthshire Railway and Canal Company, 11 C. B. 855; 17 Jur., part 1, p. 532). If, however, the money be paid to common counts, it operates merely as an admission that so much is due in respect of some contract of the nature declared upon, and the plaintiff must prove his case beyond, as upon the plea of non assumpsit or nunquam indebitatus to the rest of the claim. (Kingham v. Robins, 5 M. & W. 94). But the defendant cannot reduce the amount claimed by evidence of payment or set-off without pleading those defences. (Goldy v. Goldy, 26 L. J., Ex., 29). The same distinction holds good in actions of tort. Where the declaration is general and unspecific, as in trover, the payment admits a cause of action to the amount paid in, and the plaintiff must prove his case beyond, as upon the plea of not guilty, (Id.); but if it is specific, the cause of action declared upon is admitted. Thus, where the declaration stated a contract to carry the plaintiff, and alleged a negligent breach of duty and damage to the plaintiff, and the defendant paid money into court, it was held that he had admitted the contract and breach of duty, and that the plaintiff, therefore, was not bound to prove negligence in order to recover a larger amount. (Perren v. The Monmouthshire Railway and Canal Company, supra).

* See the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 87, s. 120, as to actions against revenue officers, and the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 158, as to actions by assignees of a bankrupt within the time limited for disputing the adjudication.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE PROMOTION OF SOCIAL SCIENCE.

Our readers have doubtless read the proceedings of this society, as they have been daily chronicled in the public journals during the last fortnight; and we propose merely to note the principal doings of the two sections which possess a peculiar interest for lawyers—namely, that of Jurisprudence, and of Reformation and Punishment. Lord John Russell, for some unknown reason, was appointed president of the former department, and in the course of his inaugural address recommended the appointment of a Minister of Justice, the exercise of an equitable jurisdiction by county courts, and first the amendment, and then the codification, of our statute law. Papers were read upon "the transfer of land;" and it was proposed that the kingdom should be divided into registration districts, that land should be registered by figure or letter upon the Ordnance or other maps, and that a certificate of title should be the only title required. Sir Fitzroy Kelly was of opinion that the title, once registered, should be a parliamentary title, and suggested the formation of courts, like the Incumbered Estate Courts of Ireland, consisting of eminent lawyers, where any one wishing to register his title might, after due notice, establish it, and that the person in whose name it was registered should be able to transfer it as stock was transferred. The law of bankruptcy, after being discussed, was referred to a committee, who are to agree upon the provisions of a bill upon the subject. Papers were read upon "the recordation of the law for purposes of promulgation, administration, and legislation," upon legal education, the registration of partnerships, and limited liability. Upon the subject of reformation and punishment, Mr. J. C. Symons read a paper to shew that there was a striking correspondence between crime and density of population—more than between ignorance and crime. Mr. T. B. Baker, of Gloucester, contributed a paper on "the possible extirpation of regular crime." He repudiated as useless the habit of sending boys to reformatories on their first conviction, as he believed that short terms of imprisonment, judiciously administered, would be of much more avail. The first conviction should be followed up by a short imprisonment, more as a warning than otherwise; the second by a much longer term of imprisonment; and the third and fourth by still longer periods; but there should be no waiting until a seventh or eighth offence. By this means there would be separated the tie which connected experienced criminals with younger ones, and the latter would in a great measure escape the infection of the former. He also advocated the extension of the age under which persons were admitted into reformatories, as he thought that equal opportunities for reformation should be extended to criminals of an older class. Mr. A. Hill, barrister-at-law, read a paper on "the Industrial Schools Act, 1857," and recommended the application of "Dunlop's Act" to this country, giving the authorities a power of compelling the attendance at school of mendicant and other children, who could not be brought or retained there by other means. Other papers were contributed upon the distinction between punishment and vengeance, and upon capital and secondary punishments.

BRITISH JURISDICTION IN MOROCCO*.

By an Order in Council published in the London Gazette of the 2nd instant, after reciting that by stat. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 94, her Majesty may exercise any jurisdiction which her Majesty hath within any country or place out of her Majesty's dominions, in the same and as ample a manner as if her Majesty had acquired such power or jurisdiction by the cession or conquest of territory, and that her Majesty hath power and jurisdiction in the dominions of his Majesty the Sultan of Morocco, it is (amongst other things) ordered—

4. That any charge against a British subject for a breach of rules and regulations, other than those relating to the observance of treaties, shall be heard and determined by her Majesty's consul; and in all cases in which the penalty shall not exceed 200 dollars, or one calendar month's imprisonment, the consul shall hear and determine the charge summarily, without the aid of assessors; but where a penalty attached to a breach of the rules and regulations, other than those relating to the observance of treaties, shall amount to more than 200 dollars, or to imprisonment for more than one calendar month, the consul, before he shall proceed to hear the charge, shall summon two disinterested British subjects of good repute to sit with him as assessors, which assessors, however, shall have no authority to decide on the innocence or guilt of the person charged, or on the amount of fine or imprisonment to be awarded to him on conviction, but it shall rest with the consul to decide on the guilt or innocence of the person charged, and on the amount of fine or imprisonment to be awarded to him: provided always, that in no case shall the penalty attached to a breach of rules and regulations, other than those for the observance of treaties, exceed 500 dollars, or three calendar months' imprisonment; and provided further, that in the event of the said assessors, or either of them, dissenting from the conviction of the party charged, or from the penalty of fine or imprisonment awarded to him by the consul, the consul shall take a note of such dissent, with the grounds thereof, and shall require good and sufficient security for the appearance of the person convicted at a future time, in order to undergo his sentence or receive his discharge; and in default of such security being given, it shall be lawful for the consul to cause the person to be detained in custody until such security is given; and the consul shall, with as little delay as possible, report his decision, with all the particulars of the case, together with the dissent of the assessors or assessor, and the grounds thereof, to her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires and Consul-General in Morocco, who shall have authority in all such cases to confirm, or vary, or reverse the decision of the consul, as to him may seem fit.

* * * * * * * *

8. That it shall be lawful for her Majesty's consul to hear and determine any suit of a civil nature by a Moorish subject against a British subject, arising within any part of the dominions of the Sultan of Morocco, the Moorish governor of the town or district, or the kadi, or other officer who may be appointed by them for that purpose, being present, if he or they so desire, during the trial and judgment of the case; and if the plaintiff in such suit be dissatisfied with the decision of the consul therein, he shall have a right of appeal against the same to the Moorish Commissioner for Foreign Affairs; and if the defendant in such suit be dissatisfied with the decision of the consul therein, he shall have a right of appeal against the same to her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires and Consul-General, and the decision of the said Moorish Commissioner for Foreign Affairs, or of the said Chargé d'Affaires and Consul-General, upon such appeal, shall be final and conclusive, to all intents and purposes.

---

* The parts omitted relate chiefly to the observance of treaties between her Majesty and the Sultan of Morocco.

9. That all suits of a civil nature by a British subject against a Moorish subject, arising within any part of the dominions of the Sultan of Morocco, shall be heard and determined by the Moorish governor of the town or district, or the kadi, according as the case may appertain to their respective courts, the British consul, or his deputy appointed by him for that purpose, being present, if the said consul shall so think fit, during the trial and judgment of the case; and if the plaintiff in any such last-mentioned suit shall be dissatisfied with the decision of the governor or kadi therein, he shall have a right of appeal against the same to her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires and Consul-General; and if the defendant in any such last-mentioned suit shall be dissatisfied with the decision of the governor or kadi therein, he shall have a right of appeal against the same to the Moorish Commissioner for Foreign Affairs; and the decision of the said Chargé d'Affaires and Consul-General, or of the said Moorish Commissioner for Foreign Affairs, upon such appeal, shall be final and conclusive, to all intents and purposes.

10. That all suits, disputes, differences, and causes of litigation of a civil nature, arising between British subjects within the dominions of the Sultan of Morocco, shall be heard and determined by her Majesty's consul, who shall be the sole judge and arbiter thereof respectively; subject, nevertheless, to an appeal against the decision of the consul therein to the Supreme Court of her Majesty's garrison and territory of Gibraltar: provided always, that the party intending so to appeal against the decision of the said consul shall, within fifteen days after the determination of the case by the consul, by himself or his agent, give to the consul notice in writing of his appeal to the said Supreme Court of Gibraltar; whereupon the consul shall, as speedily as possible, transmit to the said Supreme Court all the documents which were produced before him in the case, and none other, together with a statement of the evidence taken before him in the case, and of the grounds on which his decision was formed, and shall forthwith notify to the several parties the transmission of the said proceedings to the said Supreme Court: provided also, that it shall be lawful for the consul to require from any person so appealing to the said Supreme Court reasonable security, to consist in part of one or two sufficient sureties, to be approved by the consul, that such person so applying will duly prosecute his appeal, and will abide by the decision to be given therein by the said Supreme Court, and that in case such appeal shall fail, he will answer and satisfy all costs, loss, and damages sustained by the other party by reason of such appeal.

11. That it shall be lawful for her Majesty's consul to summon not less than two, and not more than four, disinterested British subjects, of good repute, to sit with him as assessors at the hearing of any suit, dispute, difference, or cause of litigation whatever, of a civil nature, brought before him for decision; and in case the sum sought to be recovered shall exceed 500 dollars such suit shall not be heard by the consul without assessors, if within a reasonable time such assessors can be procured; but the assessors aforesaid shall have no authority to decide on the merits of such suit; but in the event of such assessors, or any of them, dissenting from the decision of the consul, the consul shall enter the fact of such dissent, and the grounds thereof, in the minutes of the proceedings, and in case of appeal shall transmit the same to the Supreme Court of her Majesty's garrison and territory of Gibraltar, together with the documents relating to the suit.

12. That it shall be lawful for her Majesty's consul to enforce his decision in favour of or against a British subject, in a civil suit, dispute, difference, or cause of litigation, by distress and sale or imprisonment, in like manner as a decision of the Supreme Court of her Majesty's garrison and territory of Gibraltar in a civil suit is enforced within the same.

13. That in case of an appeal to the Supreme Court of her Majesty's garrison and territory of Gibraltar from the decision of her Majesty's consul, it shall be lawful for the said Supreme Court, upon such terms as to costs and otherwise as it shall think proper, to admit any further legal evidence besides that adduced before the consul, on its being established to the satisfaction of the said Supreme Court, by oath or affidavit, that the party desiring to produce such further evidence was ignorant of the existence of such evidence, or was taken by surprise, at the hearing before the consul, or was unable to produce it before the consul after due and reasonable diligence and exertion on his part, or where, under the circumstances of the case, it shall appear to the said Supreme Court that further evidence ought to be received.

14. That her Majesty's consul shall have power, in any civil suit, dispute, difference, or cause of litigation, to examine on oath, or in such form and with such ceremonies as the witness may declare to be binding on his conscience, any witness who may appear before him, and shall have power, on the application of any party in such suit, to issue a compulsory order for the attendance of any person, being a British subject, who may be competent to give evidence in such suit; and any British subject who shall have been duly served with any such compulsory order, and with a reasonable notice of the day of hearing of such suit, and upon his expenses of appearing as a witness having been paid or tendered to him by the party at whose application he shall have been ordered to attend, shall, on his wilful default to appear as a witness at the hearing of such suit, be punished with a fine not exceeding 100 dollars, or with imprisonment for a period not exceeding thirty days, at the discretion of the said consul.

15. Every witness, being a British subject, so examined on oath, whether before the consul or before the Moorish governor or kadi, who shall in any such examination give wilfully false testimony, may be convicted of and punished for the crime of wilful and corrupt perjury.

16. That it shall be lawful for her Majesty's consul to promote the settlement of any civil suit, dispute, difference, or cause of litigation, by amicable agreement between the parties, and, with the consent of the several parties, to refer the decision of a suit or contention to one or more arbitrators, and to take security from the parties that they will be bound by the result of such arbitration; and the award of such arbitrator or arbitrators shall be, to all intents and purposes, deemed and taken to be a judgment or sentence of her Majesty's consul in such civil suit, dispute, difference, or cause of litigation, and shall be entered and recorded as such, and shall have the like effect and operation, and shall be enforced accordingly, and shall be final and conclusive to all intents and purposes, and shall not be open to appeal, unless the same shall within a reasonable time have been ordered by the consul to be set aside on the ground that it is not final, or is defective, or that the arbitrator or arbitrators have exceeded their authority, or have been guilty of misconduct in the matter.

17. That it shall be lawful for her Majesty's consul to cause to be apprehended and brought before him any British subject who may be charged with having committed any crime or offence within the dominions of the Sultan of Morocco; and such consul shall thereupon proceed with all convenient speed to inquire of the same, and for such purpose shall have power to examine on oath, or in such form and with such ceremony as the witness shall declare to be binding on his conscience, any witness who may appear before him to prove the charge; and also shall have power to compel any person, being a British subject, who may be competent to give evidence as to the guilt or innocence of the party so charged, to appear and give evidence, and to punish the wilful default of any such person to appear and give evidence, after reasonable notice of the day of the hearing of such charge, by fine or imprisonment, in like manner as is provided in article 14 of this Order, and shall examine every such witness in the presence and hearing of the party accused, and shall afford the party accused all reasonable facility for cross-examining such witness, and shall cause the deposition of every such witness to be reduced to writing, and the same to be read over, and, if necessary, explained to the party accused, together with any other evidence that may have been urged against him during the course of the inquiry, and shall require such accused party to defend himself against the charge brought against him, and, if necessary, advise him of the legal effect of any voluntary confession, and shall take the evidence of any witness whom the accused party may tender to be examined in his defence; and every witness, being a British subject, so examined as aforesaid, who shall upon any such occasion give wilfully false testimony, may be convicted of and punished for the crime of wilful and corrupt perjury; and when the case has been fully inquired into, and the innocence or guilt of the person accused has been established to the satisfaction of the consul, the consul, as the case may be, shall either discharge the party accused from custody if satisfied of his innocence, or proceed to pass sentence on him if satisfied of his guilt; and it shall be lawful for the consul, having inquired of, tried, and determined, in the manner aforesaid, any charge which may be brought before him, to award to the party convicted any amount of punishment not exceeding imprisonment for one calendar month, or a fine of 200 dollars.

18. That if the crime or offence whereof any person, being a British subject, may be accused before her Majesty's consul as aforesaid, shall appear to such consul to be of such a nature as, if proved, would not be adequately punished by the infliction of such punishment as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for such consul to summon not less than two, or not more than four, disinterested British subjects of good repute to sit with him as assessors for inquiring of, trying, and determining the charges against such person; and the consul, when he shall try any such charge with the assistance of assessors as aforesaid, shall, if he is himself convinced of the guilt of the party accused, have power to award any amount of punishment not exceeding imprisonment for twelve calendar months, or a fine of 1000 dollars; and the assessors aforesaid shall have no authority to decide on the innocence or guilt of the party accused, or on the amount of punishment to be awarded to him on conviction; but in the event of the said assessors, or any of them, dissenting from the conviction of, or from the amount of punishment awarded to, the accused party, the assessors or assessor so dissenting shall be authorised to record in the minutes of the proceedings the grounds on which they or he may so dissent, and the consul shall forthwith report to her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires and Consul-General for Morocco the fact of such dissent, and of its having been so recorded in the minutes of the proceedings, and shall as soon as possible lay before the said Chargé d'Affaires and Consul-General copies of the whole of the depositions and proceedings, with the dissent of the assessor or assessors recorded therein; and it shall be lawful thereupon for her Majesty's said Chargé d'Affaires and Consul-General, by warrant under his hand and seal addressed to the consul, to confirm, or vary, or remit altogether, as to him may seem fit, the sentence and punishment awarded to the party accused, and such consul shall give immediate effect to the injunction of any such warrant: provided always, that in any case in which the assessor or assessors shall dissent from the conviction of, or from the amount of punishment awarded to, the accused party, it shall be lawful for her Majesty's consul to take good and sufficient bail from the accused party to appear and undergo the punishment awarded to him, provided the same or any portion thereof be confirmed by her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires and Consul-General, which punishment so confirmed shall commence and take effect from the day on which the decision of her Majesty's said Chargé d'Affaires and Consul-General shall be notified to the party accused.

19. That it shall and may be lawful for her Majesty's consul to cause any British subject, who shall have been twice convicted before him of any crime or offence, and punished for the same, and who, after execution of the sentence of the consul, on any second conviction, shall not be able to find good and sufficient security, to the satisfaction of the consul, for his future good behaviour, or who, having been deported under any sentence, shall during such sentence return, to be sent out of the dominions of the Sultan of Morocco; and to this end the consul shall have power and authority, as soon as may be practicable after execution of the sentence on such second conviction, to send any such twice-convicted party, or any person so returning as aforesaid, to her Majesty's garrison and territory of Gibraltar, and in the meantime to detain such party in custody until a suitable opportunity for sending him out of the dominions of the Sultan of Morocco shall present itself; and any person so to be sent out of the said dominions as aforesaid shall be embarked in custody on board one of her Majesty's vessels of war, or, if there shall be no such vessel available for such purpose, then on board any British vessel bound to Gibraltar; and it shall be lawful for the commander of any of her Majesty's ships of war, or of any British vessel bound to Gibraltar, to receive any such person as aforesaid under a warrant from the consul to him addressed, and thereupon to convey such person in custody to Gibraltar as aforesaid, in the same manner as if he were a distressed British subject, unless he shall be willing and able himself to defray the expenses of his passage.

LONDON, OCTOBER 31, 1857.

THE sections in the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, which relate to the attachment of debts, (sects. 60—67), do not expressly provide for the case of the debt attached being liable to prior claims. It seems, however, tolerably clear, upon principle, that the interest of the judgment debtor in the debt is all that can be attached, and therefore that the judgment creditor must take it subject to any pre-existing charge recognised by the law. It has been said that an attachment of debts is in the nature of an execution, (see 2 Jur., N. S., part 2, p. 41); and if so, it would be subject to prior charges created by the judgment debtor. In support of this view may be cited Hirsch v. Coates, (18 C. B. 759), in which the general words of the statute were qualified, and it was held that an order for attachment of debts had no operation upon debts of which the garnishee had previously divested himself by assignment. To a like effect is the judgment of Erle, J.*, in Watts v. Porter, (3 El. & Bl. 743; 1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 133), approved of by the Lord Chancellor in Beavan v. The Earl of Oxford, (25 L. J., Ch., 299, 306). Erle, J., was of opinion that a judge's order charging stock with a judgment debt had not priority over a previous mortgage of an equitable interest in the same stock. And in Whitworth v. Gaugain (3 Hare, 416) it was held that a judgment creditor had not the rights of a purchaser for value without notice as against an equitable mortgagee. It may, therefore, be concluded, that a debt can be attached only to the extent of the judgment debtor's interest therein.

A more difficult question, however, has arisen* as to the effect of an attorney's specific lien for his costs upon a judgment debt which has been attached. The attorney has been said to have only a claim to the equitable interference of the Court for securing his costs in the case of settlement after judgment between the plaintiff and the defendant, and not to have a strict lien upon the judgment, (per Parke, B., in Barker v. St. Quinton, 12 M. & W. 441); but certainly in the older cases his interest is uniformly spoken of as a lien. But however this may be, and supposing, as seems to be the case, that the Courts will interfere on the attorney's behalf only in case of manifest collusion between the litigant parties, or where notice of the attorney's claim has been given to the judgment debtor before he settles with the other party, it is by no means clear, we submit, that the same limit is to be placed on the protection of the Courts towards their officers where the judgment debt has been attached.

This is not the case of a settlement or compromise between a plaintiff and a defendant being disturbed by the Court, but of a proceeding in invitum, in the nature of an execution against the judgment debt, affecting the interest of the judgment debtor; and in such case it would appear that the Courts should protect the attorney, holding that the interest of the judgment debtor is the amount of the debt minus the attorney's lien or claim in respect of his costs in the action; in other words, that the attorney's claim should be paramount to the attachment. Let us briefly consider the cases which most closely bear upon this subject, and see how far they confirm this opinion. In the case of bankruptcy an attorney's specific lien or claim overrides the title of the assignees to the judgment debt.

* See also Kennett v. The Westminster Improvement Commissioners, (11 Exch. 349).

* In the case of Walker v. Bartlett, which has been before the Courts of Common Pleas and Exchequer on this point, but which we believe has been arranged without a decision by either Court.

(See Griffin v. Eyles, 1 H. Bl. 122; see also Holmes v. Tutton, 5 El. & Bl. 65; 1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 975). In the former case the point decided was, that the attorney has a lien on money levied by the sheriff under an execution on a judgment recovered by his client, notwithstanding the bankruptcy of the client; and, taking the attachment to be analogous to an execution, it is a strong authority in favour of the attorney's claim overriding the former. To shew that the attorney's claim was formerly considered a lien on the judgment, and that the Courts have been anxious to support it, the following cases may be referred to:—In Turwin v. Gibson (3 Atk. 720) Lord Hardwicke held that a solicitor, in consideration of his trouble and the money "in disburse" for his client, had a right to be paid out of a sum decreed to the plaintiff as the administratrix of his client, and had a lien upon it before the bond creditors of the deceased. In Welsh v. Hole (Dougl. 237) Lord Mansfield said, "An attorney has a lien on the money recovered by his client for his bill of costs. If the money come to his hands, he may retain to the amount of his bill. He may stop it in transitu, if he can lay hold of it. If he apply to the Court, they will prevent its being paid over till his demand is satisfied. I am inclined to go still further, and hold, that if the attorney give notice to the defendant not to pay till his bill should be discharged, a payment by the defendant after such notice would be in his own wrong, and like paying a debt which has been assigned after notice."

There is also a class of cases which shew, that upon applications to set off judgments the Courts would allow this to be done only subject to the attorney's claim; and this is now expressly so provided by Reg. Gen., Hil. T., 1853, r. 63. By that rule it is ordered, that "no set-off of damages or costs between parties shall be allowed, to the prejudice of the attorney's lien for costs in the particular suit against which the set-off is sought;" and the attachment of a judgment debt is very similar to a set-off of judgments, and would seem to come within the spirit of the rule. In Mitchell v. Oldfield (4 T. R. 123) an application to set off judgments was granted only on an undertaking being given to satisfy the attorney's claim. Lord Kenyon, C. J., there said, "Attornies and solicitors have a lien on all papers in their hands, and judgments recovered for their costs;" and Buller, J., said, "Though this Court have said that they will not interfere on behalf of the attorney, and prevent the plaintiff from settling his own cause without first paying the attorney's bill, yet when the adverse party against whom a judgment has been obtained applies to get rid of that judgment, the Court will take care that the attorney's bill is satisfied." (See also Middleton v. Hill, 1 Mau. & S. 240; Marr v. Smith, 4 B. & Al. 466; and Swain v. Senate, 2 N. R. 99, 101). To these may be added the following passage from Mr. Locke's book on Foreign Attachment, (p. 33):—"Money paid over to the attorney may be attached, but he is entitled to his lien on the money for the amount of his bill of costs:" (citing Phene v. Watkins, MS., 1795; see also Westoby v. Day, 2 El. & Bl. 605; 18 Jur., part 1, p. 10).

The above observations have been made in support of the attorney's specific lien or claim for costs in the action, and not of a general lien, which, indeed, was decided in Hough v. Edwards (1 H. & Norm. 171; 2 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 814) not to be available against an attachment of the judgment debt. (See also Bozon v. Bollond, 4 My. & C. 354).

BRITISH JURISDICTION IN MOROCCO.

21. That it shall be lawful for her Majesty's consul within the dominions of the Sultan of Morocco, upon information laid before him by one or more credible witnesses that there is reasonable ground to apprehend that any British subject is about to commit a breach of the public peace, to cause such British subject to be brought before him, and to require such British subject to give sufficient security to keep the peace; and in the event of any British subject being convicted of and punished for a breach of the peace, to cause such British subject, after he shall have undergone the punishment which may have been awarded to him by the consul, to find security for his good behaviour; and in the event of any British subject who may be required as aforesaid to give sufficient security to keep the peace, or to find security for his good behaviour, being unable or wilfully omitting to do so, then and in any such case it shall be lawful for her Majesty's consul to send such British subject out of the dominions of the Sultan of Morocco, in the manner pointed out in article 19 of this Order.

22. That in all cases in which a British subject shall have been sent out of the dominions of the Sultan of Morocco, as provided in the three next preceding articles of this Order, the consul sending him out shall forthwith report such act of deportation, with the grounds of his decision thereon, to her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires and Consul-General in Morocco.

23. That it shall be lawful for her Majesty's consul to cause to be apprehended and brought before him any British subject who may be charged with smuggling or importing into the dominions of the said Sultan any goods whereon any duty shall be charged or payable to the said Sultan, with intent to evade the payment of such duty, or any goods the importation whereof shall be prohibited; and such consul shall thereupon proceed with all convenient speed to inquire into the same, on oath or solemn affirmation, and to hear the witnesses on both sides, with like powers and in like manner in all respects as is provided by article 14 of this Order. And it shall be lawful for the consul, having inquired into and heard the said charge, to determine the same; and if he shall find the party guilty, if the charge against him shall be of importing into the said dominions prohibited goods, then to award him to pay a fine not exceeding treble the value of the said goods at the current price of the day; and if the charge shall be of smuggling or importing goods with intent to evade the payment of duty as aforesaid, then to award him to pay a fine not exceeding treble the amount of the duties leviable thereon; and in case of non-payment of any such fine or fines, to award him to be imprisoned for a period not exceeding three months; or it shall be lawful for such consul, without awarding the payment of any fine, to award that such party shall be imprisoned for a period not exceeding six months, in such place as he shall appoint: provided always, that no British subject charged only with importing prohibited goods shall be apprehended unless and until he shall have had one week's notice to appear and answer the charge, and shall have refused, failed, or omitted so to appear.

24. This article provides for revision of sentence in certain cases by the superior consular officer of the district.

25. That in cases of common assault it shall be lawful for the consul before whom the complaint is made to promote reconciliation between the parties, and to suffer compensation and amends to be made, and the proceedings thereby to be finally stayed.

* * * * * * *

27. That except as regards offences committed by British subjects against the stipulations of any treaty between her Majesty and the Sultan of Morocco, or against any rules and regulations for the observance of the stipulations of any such treaty or convention, duly affixed and exhibited according to the provisions of article 2 of this Order, or against any rules and regulations for the peace, order, and good government of her Majesty's subjects being within the dominions of the Sultan of Morocco, no act done by a British subject within the dominions of the said Sultan shall by her Majesty's consul be deemed and taken to be a crime or misdemeanour, or offence rendering the person committing it amenable to punishment, which, if done within any part of her Majesty's dominions, would not, by a Court of justice having criminal jurisdiction in her Majesty's dominions, have been deemed and taken to be a crime or misdemeanour or offence rendering the person committing it amenable to punishment; and her Majesty is pleased to appoint, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, her Majesty's garrison and territory of Gibraltar as the place where crimes and offences committed by British subjects within the dominions of the Sultan of Morocco, which it may be expedient shall be inquired of, tried, determined, and punished within her Majesty's dominions, shall be so inquired of, tried, determined, and punished; and her Majesty's consul resident in Morocco shall have authority to cause any British subject charged with the commission of any crime or offence, the cognisance whereof may at any time appertain to him, to be sent for trial to her Majesty's said garrison and territory of Gibraltar.

28. That it shall be lawful for her Majesty's consul to cause any British subject charged with the commission of any crime or offence, the cognisance whereof may at any time appertain to him, to be sent, in any of her Majesty's ships of war, or in any British vessel, to her Majesty's garrison and territory of Gibraltar, for trial before the Supreme Court of the said garrison and territory; and it shall be lawful for the commander of any of her Majesty's ships of war, or of any British vessel, to receive any such person on board, with a warrant from the said consul addressed to the chief magistrate of police of the said garrison and territory, and thereupon to keep and detain in lawful custody, and to convey him in custody to Gibraltar, and on his arrival there to deliver him, with the said warrant, into the custody of the said chief magistrate of police, or other officer within the said garrison and territory lawfully acting as such, who, on receipt of the said warrant, and of the party therein named, shall be authorised to commit, and shall commit, such party so sent for trial to the common gaol of the said garrison and territory; and it shall be lawful for the keeper of the said common gaol to cause such party to be detained in safe and proper custody, and to be produced upon the order of the said Supreme Court; and the Supreme Court, at the sessions to be holden next after such committal, shall proceed to hear and determine the charge against such party, and to punish him for the same if found guilty, in the same manner as if the crime with which he may be charged had been committed within her Majesty's said garrison and territory of Gibraltar.

29. That her Majesty's consul, on any occasion of sending a prisoner to Gibraltar for trial, shall observe the provisions made with regard to prisoners sent for trial to a British colony, in the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 94.

30. That the Supreme Court of her Majesty's garrison and territory of Gibraltar shall have, and may exercise, concurrently with her Majesty's consul, authority and jurisdiction in regard to all suits of a civil nature between British subjects arising within any part of the dominions of the Sultan of Morocco: provided always, that the said Supreme Court shall not be bound, unless in a fit case it shall deem it right so to do, by writ of certiorari or otherwise, to debar or prohibit the consul from hearing and determining, pursuant to the provisions of the several articles of this Order, any suit of a civil nature between British subjects, or to stay the proceedings of the consul in any such matter.

31. That all fines and penalties imposed under this Order may be levied by distress and seizure and sale of ships, and of goods and chattels; and no bill of sale, mortgage, or transfer of property made by a party accused after his apprehension, or with a view to securing such party against any crime or offence committed or to be committed by him, or against the consequences thereof, shall avail to defeat any of the provisions of this order.

32. That it shall be lawful for her Majesty's consul from time to time to establish rules of practice to be observed in proceedings before him, and to make regulations for defraying the expenses of witnesses in such proceedings and the cost of criminal prosecutions, and also to establish rates and scales of fees to be taken in regard to civil suits heard and determined before the said consul.

34. That it shall be lawful for her Majesty's consul to grant probate of will or letters of administration to the intestate estate of any British subject, or any native of a state or place under British protection, who shall die and leave property within the dominions of the Sultan of Morocco; and if such probate or letters of administration shall not be applied for within thirty days after the death of the deceased person, it shall be lawful for the consul to administer to the estate of such person, and for so doing to reserve to himself out of the proceeds of such estate a commission not exceeding 2l. 10s. per cent. on the account thereof.

35. That a register shall be kept by her Majesty's consul of all British subjects residing within the dominions of the Sultan of Morocco. * * * *

36. That her Majesty's consul shall and may exercise all or any of the powers which, by any act or acts of the Imperial Parliament for the regulation of merchant seamen, or for the regulation of the mercantile marine, may now or at any time hereafter be exercised by any justice or justices of the peace within her Majesty's dominions.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 7, 1857.

AMONG the numerous distinctions in the English law few perhaps will stand the test of a candid examination worse than that which, so little to the credit of our jurisprudence and Legislature, has so long existed between specialty debts—that is to say, debts under seal—and simple contract debts—that is to say, debts not under seal. There is no valid reason for the priority given to specialty debts over debts by simple contract in the administration of the legal assets of a deceased person, for no one can seriously contend that the mere affixing of a bit of sealing-wax impressed with a seal, or something supposed to represent a seal, ought to have any such effect. It is a distinction, moreover, not existing, we believe, in any other country, and it constitutes one of the differences between our law and that of Scotland which it would be well at once to abolish.

Courts of equity, as far as they have had it in their power, have endeavoured to put debts by specialty and debts by simple contract upon an equality, but they were only enabled to do this with respect to what are termed "equitable assets." The Legislature, however, and recently the Courts of equity, have done much to limit the extent of the property which would formerly have been considered equitable assets. There is no doubt that where land is either charged with or devised upon trust for payment of debts, all debts not being or constituting specific liens upon the land will be payable pari passu, it being rendered equitable assets.

In former times, however, Courts of equity seem to have been inclined to construe, except when prevented by the Legislature, all equitable property to be equitable assets. Thus, where a person mortgaged an estate in fee, the equity of redemption was considered equitable assets. (See Plunkett v. Penson, 2 Atk. 294). It is true that when a trust estate descended upon an heir-at-law, that was legal assets; but this depended upon the 29 Car. 2, c. 3, s. 10, which gave to a specialty creditor his remedy at law by an action of debt against the heir of the obligor, while it did not extend the same remedy as against a mortgagee in fee of a trust estate. Sir J. Romilly's Act, however, has made the equity of redemption of a mortgage in fee legal assets. (See Foster v. Handley, 1 Sim., N. S., 200; 15 Jur., part 1, p. 73).

Considerable discussion has taken place as to whether the equity of redemption of a term of years is to be considered as legal or equitable assets. In the case of The Creditors of Sir Charles Cox, (3 P. Wms. 341), Sir J. Jekyll, M. R., held, that a mere right of redemption of a term being barely an equitable interest, it was reasonable to construe it equitable assets, and consequently distributable amongst all the creditors pro ratâ, without having respect to the degree or quality of their debts, all debts being in a conscientious regard equal, and equality the highest equity. The doctrine laid down in this case was followed or approved of in Hartwell v. Chitters, (Amb. 308); Clay v. Willis, (1 B. & Cr. 372); and Barker v. May, (9 B. & Cr. 493). In a note, however, to the case of The Creditors of Sir Charles Cox, (3 P. Wms. 344), Mr. Cox, the learned editor of these Reports, says that the point supposed to have been determined was not in fact determined in that case, and cites several old authorities to shew that "it had been decided that chattels, whether real or personal, mortgaged or pledged by the testator and redeemed by the executor, shall be assets at law in the hands of the executor, for so much as they are worth beyond the sum paid for their redemption, though recoverable only in equity."

The fact appears to be, that Lord Hardwicke and Sir J. Jekyll, feeling strongly that the rule of law which gives priority to specialty creditors was unjust, had endeavoured, contrary to the old authorities, to lay down as a general rule that whatever property was recoverable only in equity should be considered as equitable assets. The recent authorities, however, lay down as a general principle, that in determining whether assets are legal or equitable, the question is not whether the testator's interest was legal or equitable, but whether a creditor of the testator, seeking to get paid out of such assets, could obtain payment thereout from a Court of law, or could only obtain it through a Court of equity: that a Court of law would treat as assets every item of property that came to the hands of an executor which he had recovered, or had a right to recover, merely virtute officii, i. e. which he would have a right to recover if the testator had merely appointed him executor, without saying anything about his property, or the application thereof. These are the principles laid down by Sir R. T. Kindersley, V. C., in accordance with which he decided, in the recent case of Cook v. Gregson, (3 Drew. 547), that the equity of redemption of a sum of money charged on land is legal assets in the hands of the executor. His Honor observed, that if there were nothing in the will but the appointment of executor, the executor would be entitled, simply virtute officii, to ask for redemption—that a mere administrator might demand it; and if so, it appeared to him that the general principle, as he had stated it, applied to an equity of redemption of a chattel interest, whether real or personal, and that such an equity of redemption would be legal assets. In that case it was an equity of redemption of an equitable charge of a sum of money on real estate, which the executor had clearly, in his opinion, a right, in his mere character of executor, first to redeem, and then enforce payment of. (See also Shee v. French, 3 Drew. 716).

Although it was not necessary in Cook v. Gregson (3 Drew. 547) for the Vice-Chancellor to determine whether the case of The Creditors of Sir Charles Cox, (3 P. Wms. 341), and that class of cases, were rightly decided, his Honor nevertheless observed, that, if he were called upon so to do, he should say that in his opinion those cases were not sustainable, and ought not at this day to be followed. We may therefore conclude that in all probability, should the point have to be decided, the equity of redemption of a term of years would now be considered as legal assets.

In fact, it is difficult to say that any property of a testator would be considered as equitable assets except land, which he may either have charged with or devised upon trust for payment of his debts. And what can be more absurd, if specialty debts really ought in justice to be paid before simple contract debts in the administration of assets, to allow the debtor by his will, as to his landed property, to put them both upon an equality?

If the principle of the Court of equity is right which denies priority to simple contract debts, it is much to be regretted that the Legislature does not in all cases make debts by specialty and simple contract, as is the case in bankruptcy and insolvency, payable pari passu. It would thereby put an end to much litigation, which often arises first in determining whether a debt is a debt by specialty or by simple contract, and lastly in determining the still vexata quæstio, "what are to be considered equitable and what legal assets?"

Decisions upon that branch of the law which relates to patents are of peculiar interest, not merely to the lawyer, but to the man of science, and we propose to call attention to some of the more recent cases upon the subject.

One of the most important principles which may be deduced from several of these cases is, that upon an agreement for the purchase of a patent there is no implied warranty on the part of the vendor, whether he be the inventor or not, that it is of any public utility, or that it is new or of any value whatever. A patent in this respect is treated as analogous to a specific chattel, and therefore, if the subject-matter be that which the purchaser agrees to buy, viz. a patent for the supposed invention, he cannot, in the absence of an express warranty or of fraud, refuse to pay the purchase money upon the ground that the patent is worthless, or that the vendor had no title. (Morley v. Attenborough, 3 Exch. 500). The doctrine of caveat emptor applies equally to both. Thus in Hall v. Conder and Another (3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 963) the plaintiff had obtained a patent for a method of preventing boiler explosions, and had agreed to sell one-half of it to the defendant for 2500*l*. In an action for the amount it was held in the Common Pleas, and afterwards affirmed in the Exchequer Chamber, that it was no answer to allege that the invention was wholly worthless, and of no public utility, and not new, and that the plaintiff was not the true and first inventor.

A similar point was decided in Lawes v. Purser, (3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 182; 26 L. J., Q. B., 25); Smith v. Neale, (3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 516; 26 L. J., C. P., 143); and Jones v. Lees, (1 H. & Norm. 189; 2 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 645).

There is an important decision upon the effect of notice of objections to a patent in Chollett v. Hoffman, (3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 935). By the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 83, s. 41, in an action for the infringement of letters-patent, the defendant must deliver with his pleas particulars of any objections on which he means to rely at the trial in support of his pleas, and at the trial no evidence is to be allowed to be given of any objection impeaching the validity of such letters-patent which is not contained in such particulars. The declaration in this case alleged, that by indenture between the inventor and the plaintiff, letters-patent were duly assigned to the plaintiff. The plea denied the assignment, and it was held that the defendant might shew that the assignment was not registered pursuant to sect. 35 of the above statute; and this, although his notice of objection made no mention of the assignment, because the provisions of such statute, as well as those of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 83, were confined to notices of objections affecting the validity of the patent itself. It was also held that the issue upon the due assignment involved not merely the execution of the indenture, but also such an assignment and registration thereof as entitled the plaintiff to maintain his action as the sole and exclusive proprietor of the patent.

If it is considered that the particulars either of breaches or of objections are too vague, application should be made to a judge at chambers for better particulars, as no complaint of their vagueness or uncertainty will avail at the trial. (Chollett v. Hoffman, supra; Hull v. Bollard, 1 H. & Norm. 134; 25 L. J., Ex., 304).

ATTACHMENT OF DEBTS.

The case of Sympson v. Prothero (26 L. J., Ch., 671) bears upon the subject which we discussed in our last number. In that case the plaintiffs, who were attornies, sought to establish a lien upon a sum of money which the Court had ordered to be paid to their client, but which had been attached to answer a judgment debt under on order of a common-law judge. The plaintiffs had acted as attornies for their client in an action, and also in a suit to restrain that action, and ultimately in that suit the sum of 600*l*. was ordered to be paid to their client by the opposite party, to whom the attornies gave notice that they claimed a lien on such sum in respect of their costs. After such notice the 600*l*. was attached to answer a larger debt, and it was contended on behalf of the judgment creditor that he had a prior title, and also that a solicitor had not a lien on a fund recovered in a suit in equity for his costs in an action at law. Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., however, upheld the lien, and in delivering judgment said, "I think that this money was recovered by the exertions of the plaintiffs; they are entitled to a lien upon it for their costs, and I do not see how the subsequent charging order can affect that lien. Some question might have arisen if no notice of the lien had been served. . . . . The principle upon which I apprehend the Court should proceed in these transactions is, to consider how the fund has been obtained; and if you find that it has been recovered by the exertions of the party claiming the lien, it is but right that he should have his reward out of the fruits of his exertions."

REGULATIONS

To be observed in the Conduct of Business at the Chambers of the Master of the Rolls and the Vice-Chancellors, by order of the Right Hon. Sir John Romilly, Master of the Rolls, the Hon. the Vice-Chancellor Sir Richard Torin Kindersley, the Hon. the Vice-Chancellor Sir John Stuart, and the Hon. the Vice-Chancellor Sir William Page Wood.—This 8th day of August, 1857*.

I. Summonses are not to be altered after they are sealed, except upon application at chambers, and any alterations then made will be marked with the seal of such chambers.

II. Upon applications for time to answer, a printed copy of the bill and the interrogatories to be answered are to be produced.

III. Whenever any matter is adjourned from the court to chambers, or any directions are given in court to be acted upon at chambers, whether upon a matter adjourned into court from chambers or upon any other occasion, without an order being drawn up, a note signed by the registrar, stating for what purpose such matter is adjourned to chambers, or the directions given, is to be procured from the registrar and left at chambers.

IV. In drawing up decrees and orders to be left at chambers the solicitors are to take care that every account, inquiry, sale, direction to appoint receiver, and other direction to be answered at chambers, is numbered consecutively, according to the form set forth in the Schedule (C.) referred to in the General Order No. 8 of the 16th October, 1852, and that the other directions are not numbered.

V. At the same time that any decree or order made in a suit instituted by bill or claim is left at chambers, a print of the bill or claim is to be left.

VI. A note stating the names of the solicitors for all the parties, and shewing for which of the parties such solicitors are concerned, is to be left at chambers with every decree or order.

VII. For the purpose of procuring the direction of the judge as to the manner of serving notice of a decree or order, pursuant to the 5th General Order of the 1st June, 1854,

The plaintiff is to make an ex parte application by summons, and thereupon to shew by affidavit, as far as he is able—

1. With respect to infants:
   The ages of the infants.
   Whether they have any parents or testamentary guardians, or guardians appointed by the Court of Chancery.
   Where and under whose care the infants are residing, at whose expense they are maintained, and in case they have no father or guardian, who are their nearest relations.
   And that the parents, guardians, relations, or persons upon whom it is proposed to serve the notice have no interest in the matters in question, or if they have, the nature of such interest, and that it is not adverse to the interests of the infants.
2. With respect to persons of unsound mind not found so by inquisition:
   Where and under whose care such persons are residing, and at whose expense they are maintained.
   Who are their nearest relations, and that such relations, or person upon whom it is proposed to serve the notice, have no interest in the matters in question, or if they have, the nature of such interest, and that it is not adverse to the interest of the persons of unsound mind.

VIII. A copy of every certificate, by a record and writ clerk, of the entry of a memorandum of service of notice of a decree or order, and of every order giving liberty to a person served with such notice to attend the proceedings, certified by the solicitor, is to be left at chambers.

IX. Upon the notice of a claim having been entered at chambers by a creditor or other claimant served upon the solicitors in the cause, the number of the entry of the claim is to be stated.

X. Every alteration in an account verified by affidavit to be left at chambers is to be marked with the initials of the commissioner or officer before whom the affidavit is sworn, and such alterations are not to be made by erasures with the knife or other instrument.

XI. Accounts, extracts from parish registers, particulars of creditors' debts, and other documents referred to by affidavit, are not to be annexed to the affidavit, or referred to in the affidavit as annexed, but are to be referred to as exhibits.

XII. Every certificate on an exhibit referred to in an affidavit signed by the commissioner or officer before whom the affidavit is sworn must have the short title of the cause or matter.

XIII. Affidavits for the purpose of enabling the judge to fix reserved bids are to state the value of the property, by reference to an exhibit containing such value, so that the value may not be disclosed by the affidavit when filed.

XIV. As soon as particulars and conditions of sale settled at chambers have been printed, two prints thereof, certified by the solicitor to be correct prints of the particulars and conditions settled at the judges' chambers, are to be left at chambers.

XV. An office copy of the affidavit of the person appointed to sell, of the result of the sale, with the bidding paper and particulars therein referred to, are to be left at chambers at least one clear day before the day appointed for settling the certificate of the result of the sale.

XVI. Receivers' accounts are to be delivered at chambers on or before the day appointed for that purpose, and in default the receiver will be liable to the consequences imposed by the General Order of the 23rd April, 1796.

XVII. All accounts, copies, and papers left at chambers are to be written upon foolscap paper bookwise, unless the nature of the document renders it impracticable to do so.

XVIII. Where any cause originating in chambers shall, at the original or any subsequent hearing thereof, have been adjourned for further consideration, such cause may, after the expiration of eight days, and within fourteen days from the filing of the certificate of the chief clerk of the judge to whose court the cause is attached, be brought on for further consideration by a summons to be taken out by the plaintiff or party having the conduct of the cause, and after the expiration of such fourteen days by a summons to be taken out by any other party; and such summons is to be in the form prescribed by the Order No. 1 of the 16th October, 1852, and set forth in the Schedule (A.) thereto; and the object of the application may be stated as follows:—"That this cause, the further consideration whereof was adjourned by the order of the —— day of ——, 185—, may be further considered."

* The above rules, although dated the 8th August last, were not communicated to the profession or the public before the 28th ultimo.

A summons should be taken out in the names of the infants by a next friend, in the form used for originating proceedings in chambers, intituled in the same manner as the petition or intended petition—that ——, or some other proper person or persons, may be appointed guardian or guardians of the said infants, for the purpose of making an application on behalf of the said infants [or, consenting on behalf of the said infants to an application] to the Court under the provisions of the above act. In case the application to the Court is to be made on behalf of the infants, the guardian must be appointed before the petition is presented. Upon this application the guardian or committee should make an affidavit that he believes it to be proper, and for the benefit of the infant or lunatic, that the application proposed to be made should be made [or, consented to] on behalf of the said infant or lunatic; and such other evidence, if any, should be adduced as the circumstances of the case may require, to shew the propriety of the application, so far as the infant or lunatic is concerned, and the petition should be produced.

XXIII. For the purpose of procuring the directions of the judge, pursuant to the 3rd General Order of the 15th November, 1856,

A summons is to be taken out, after the petition has been answered, intituled in the same manner as the petition, that directions may be given in what newspapers the notices required by the act are to be inserted.

The petition is to be produced on the return of the summons, and the judge's direction will be written on the petition, and signed by his chief clerk.

FINLASON'S COMMON-LAW ACTS.

Recently published, in 12mo., price 14*s.* cloth,

THE COMMON-LAW PROCEDURE ACTS of 1852 and 1854; with Notes, containing all the Cases either already expressly decided on or tending to elucidate them. With an Appendix, containing the Common-law Procedure Act of Will. 4, the recent Acts on Evidence, the New Rules to Michaelmas Vacation, 1854, and an Introduction. By W. F. FINLASON, Esq., Barrister at Law.

"This is, in our judgment, a most excellent and carefully written book. The equity powers given to the Common-law Courts are admirably done. The views taken by Mr. Finlason of the practical bearing and operation of these acts are remarkably shrewd and suggestive. Such men, and their editions of statutes, tend very greatly to improve the laws they expound, and powerfully assist the objects of the Legislature."—Law Magazine, Feb. 1855.

"We have now before us the work of Mr. Finlason, whose previous labours in expounding other statutes entitle him to the favourable consideration of the Profession. The notes to the various new enactments are very full and valuable."—Legal Observer, Jan. 6, 1855.

"This work is well done."—Law Times, Jan. 6, 1855.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 14, 1857.

THE case of Ex parte Baker, (3 Jur., N. S., part 1, pp. 514, 937), which has been before the Courts of Queen's Bench and Exchequer, involves the question whether the commitment of an artificer to prison under the 4 Geo. 4, c. 34, s. 3, (the Masters and Servants Act), for absenting himself from the service, does or does not dissolve the contract; or, in other words, whether, if he refuses after the imprisonment to return to the service, his absence is a fresh offence, for which he can be again committed to prison. The judges of the Court of Queen's Bench have answered this question in the affirmative; whilst in the Court of Exchequer two of their Lordships (Bramwell and Watson, BB.) agreed with the Court of Queen's Bench; Martin, B., seemed to lean the other way, although expressing no positive opinion; and Pollock, C. B., adopted the negative view of the question. It should be stated, however, that what was said upon this point by the learned Barons may be considered as extrajudicial, inasmuch as the prisoner was discharged by them upon another point. The facts were these:—A potter had been committed by a justice of the peace for having unlawfully absented himself from the service of his master. An application was thereupon made to the Court of Queen's Bench for a certiorari to remove the conviction, and also for a writ of habeas corpus, for the purpose of getting the prisoner discharged from custody. Affidavits were used, from which it appeared that the prisoner had previously, on the 15th March, 1857, been committed to prison for one month for absenting himself from the service of the same master under the same contract. Upon his discharge from prison he entered into another service, and refused to return to his original service, although he was requested to do so. Thereupon a second summons was taken out, and he was again committed, (May 13th). The validity of this second commitment was now questioned, and it was contended that there had been merely a continuing absence, and that no fresh offence had been committed for which the prisoner was liable to be imprisoned. The Court of Queen's Bench refused the application, and a similar motion was afterwards made to the Court of Exchequer, by whom the prisoner was discharged, the majority of the Court holding that the warrant of commitment was bad for not dealing with the abatement of wages during the imprisonment—a point which was not taken in the Court of Queen's Bench. By the stat. 4 Geo. 4, c. 34, "if any servant in husbandry, or any artificer, calico printer, or potter, &c., shall contract with any person to serve him for any time or times whatsoever, or in any other manner, and shall not enter into or commence his service, (such contract being in writing, and signed by the contracting parties), or having entered into such service shall absent himself from his service before the term of his contract, whether such contract shall be in writing or not in writing, shall be completed, or neglect to fulfil the same, or be guilty of any other misconduct or misdemeanour in the execution thereof, or otherwise respecting the same, it shall and may be lawful for any justice of the peace, &c., upon complaint thereof &c., and if it shall appear to any such justice that any such servant in husbandry, &c. shall not have fulfilled such contract, or hath been guilty of any other misconduct or misdemeanour as aforesaid, to commit every such person to the house of correction, there to remain and be held for a reasonable time, not exceeding three months, and to abate a proportionable part of his wages for and during such period as he shall be so confined in the house of correction, or, in lieu thereof, to punish the offender by abating the whole or any part of his wages, or to discharge such servant in husbandry, &c. from his contract, service, or employment." However harshly this enactment might, under a possible but by no means probable state of things, operate upon the labouring classes, yet we should have thought, but for the positive opinion of Pollock, C. B., and the doubts expressed by Martin, B., that, looking at the words of the section, its construction is clear and plain. Under the first head of punishment the magistrate may imprison the servant and abate his wages; and if he fails to adjudicate as to the abatement of wages, the conviction is bad, as decided by the Court of Exchequer in this very case. Then what wages are to be abated? Why, "a proportionable part of his wages for and during such period as he shall be so confined in the house of correction." Now, if the committal were itself a discharge from the contract, there could be no wages to abate during the period of the imprisonment. From the expressions themselves, therefore, we think it may be gathered that the Legislature intended that the contract should continue notwithstanding the committal and imprisonment. Then, again, the statute provides two less degrees of punishment in lieu of the imprisonment and abatement of wages, viz. an abatement of the whole or any part of the wages, or a discharge from the contract. In the words of Erle, J., "the statute contemplates the relation of master and servant as still continuing if the servant is imprisoned; for it authorises the magistrate, in the alternative, to send the servant to prison for three months, or to punish him by abating part of his wages, or to discharge him from his contract." It is true, that with a vindictive master, a pliant magistrate, and an obstinate servant, the state of things suggested by the Chief Baron might arise, viz. the imprisonment of the servant during nearly the entire period of his contract to serve. It is also true that the treadmill is not the most desirable mode of enforcing the specific performance of contracts to serve, and it is satisfactory to learn from Martin, B., that a bill will shortly be brought into Parliament upon the subject that may provide a more efficient substitute.

The case of Hooper v. Lane, in the House of Lords, (3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1026), will henceforth be a leading authority upon the subject of arrest by a sheriff. The material facts were these:—Lane, in May, 1842, issued a writ of ca. sa. against one Bacon, and delivered it to Hooper, the sheriff of Middlesex, for execution. In August, 1843, Bacon was arrested by the sheriff, but it was on mesne process at the suit of one Arambura, and not upon Lane's writ. The capias upon which Bacon was actually arrested turned out to be void, and after a few days Bacon was ordered to be discharged as to this process. An order was afterwards made for the discharge of Bacon from the custody of the sheriff, although he claimed to detain him on the good writ of Lane. Bacon was not afterwards taken, and in an action at the suit of Lane against the sheriff for neglecting to arrest Bacon, and also for arresting him under void process, by reason whereof he was ordered to be discharged, whereby the sheriff deprived himself of the means of taking or detaining him, the main question which arose was, whether, the first arrest being illegal, the detainer on the second writ was also unlawful. The judgment of the House of Lords decides that it was. Of the nine judges, however, who gave their opinion to the House, four were in favour of the sheriff, namely, Wightman and Erle, JJ., and Martin and Bramwell, BB. They were of opinion that the sheriff had strictly performed his duty towards Lane, and therefore ought not to be answerable to him; that admitting the first arrest to have been unjustifiable, yet there is no rule of law which prevents a sheriff, who has a defendant wrongfully in custody at the suit of one plaintiff, from detaining him at the suit of another, who has lodged a regular writ in the office to be executed, and who was unconnected with the illegal arrest; that therefore Bacon ought not to have been discharged from custody when the sheriff claimed to detain him by virtue of Lane's writ; and therefore the consequent damage was occasioned, not by breach of duty on the part of the sheriff, but by the improper discharge of Bacon by the judge. The learned judges whose opinions were adopted by the Lord Chancellor were Coleridge, Cresswell, Crompton, Williams, and Crowder, JJ. Their view was, that when the sheriff has a defendant in custody under circumstances which make that custody illegal as between the sheriff and the party detained, and so entitle the latter to be discharged from that illegal detention, the sheriff is bound to discharge him, whatever valid writs he may have held at the time of the illegal arrest, or which he may have received afterwards during the illegal imprisonment. The Lord Chancellor and a majority of the judges recognised and acted upon the decision of the Court of Common Pleas in Barratt v. Price, (9 Bing. 566). There an officer of the sheriff held a warrant to arrest the defendant, and the officer's son took upon himself, without any lawful authority, to arrest the defendant, and handed him over to a police constable on a false charge of felony. The father, having notice of the facts, delivered the warrant to his son, in the hope that he might thereby justify the arrest made by him; but a judge, on application, ordered the defendant to be discharged from that arrest. He was, however, detained on a capias ad satisfaciendum which had been lodged with the sheriff by the plaintiff Barratt, who was in no way connected with the illegal arrest, and the Court considered that he was entitled to be discharged also from that detainer. Tindal, C. J., held, that as the sheriff had by his act illegally arrested the defendant, he was not in custody under the writ at the suit of Barratt, but was suffering a false imprisonment, and that such false imprisonment, being no arrest in the original action, could not operate as an arrest under the other writs lodged with the sheriff. "The Chief Justice," said the Lord Chancellor, commenting upon this case, "took care to explain that he did not mean to infringe upon—indeed, he expressly recognised—the doctrine, that where a sheriff has several writs against the same defendant, and arrests him under one of them, that operates as an arrest under all. To make a second arrest of a defendant already in custody would be a mere form, actum agere. But where the sheriff has a defendant in custody by virtue of what amounts to a false imprisonment, there the first [valid] writ is out of the question; he cannot rely on that as having given him any authority; he is a mere trespasser, and, in contemplation of law, has not arrested the defendant at all." The Lord Chancellor also drew the following distinction, which it will be useful to bear in mind:—"If a sheriff, holding a valid writ at the suit of A., and an invalid writ at the suit of B., arrests on both writs, the arrest is certainly good, because a good ground of arrest exists, and is, I assume, made known to the party arrested. If, holding a valid and also an invalid writ, he arrests on the invalid writ only, then he is not entitled for his justification to rely on the valid writ. He is bound when he executes the writ to make known the ground of the arrest, in order, among other reasons, that the person arrested may know whether or not he is bound to submit to the arrest. Where the sheriff has arrested on one good and valid writ, he may detain on any number of valid writs which he had at the time of the arrest, or which may afterwards have reached him. A subsequent arrest would in such case be an idle form; indeed, it could not, in the very nature of things, be made at all, if arrest is considered to mean an act whereby the person arrested is deprived of freedom. Of that he would have been already lawfully deprived, and he could not, by any subsequent form of arrest, be deprived of what was already gone from him. But in the case of an arrest on an invalid writ it is different. Though the party arrested has been deprived of his liberty, that has been done in circumstances which make it the duty of the sheriff to discharge him; he has no right to treat him as a person deprived of his liberty, and an arrest on the valid writ is therefore necessary. But to allow the sheriff to make such an arrest while the party was unlawfully confined by him would be to permit him to profit by his own wrong, and therefore cannot be tolerated. He cannot arrest him, because he has already deprived him of his liberty; he cannot detain him, because he is entitled to be discharged." Professional opinion will probably be almost as much divided as the judges are upon the propriety of this decision; it certainly seems hard upon the sheriff that he should be compelled to discharge a person whom he would be entitled to take at that moment if he were at large; that he cannot detain his prisoner, although he might take him to prison, and detain him there, if he were not already in prison; and that by thus discharging him under compulsion of law, he is liable to damages for not arresting him. There is, however, this satisfaction, that if error there be in the ultimate decision of this case, it is on the right side, as it will render public officers intrusted with the power of arrest more careful in looking to their authority, and in strictly keeping within its limits.

ARRANGEMENTS BY DEED UNDER THE BANKRUPT-LAW CONSOLIDATION ACT, 1849.

Arrangements by deed, under the 224th and subsequent sections of the stat. 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, (commonly called "the six-sevenths clauses"), have been the subject of some important decisions, a brief notice of which may be useful to our readers. The clauses in question are very imperfectly expressed, and seem to have been drawn without sufficient consideration of all the circumstances incident to the framing and carrying into effect of a private arrangement. The act, it will be seen, enacts that every deed or memorandum of arrangement entered into between any trader liable to become bankrupt and his creditors, and signed by or on behalf of six-sevenths in number and value of his creditors whose debts amount to 10*l.* and upwards, "touching such trader's liabilities and his release therefrom, and the distribution, inspection, conduct, management, and mode of winding up of his estate, or all or any of such matters, or any matters having reference thereto," shall bind all his creditors, provided the conditions as to notices and other matters contained in the subsequent sections are fulfilled.

In Tetley v. Taylor, (1 El. & Bl. 521), the Court, commenting on the terms of the 224th section, said, "It is impossible to contend that these words necessarily require that the deed should provide for the distribution of all the trader's effects among his creditors, or that they exclude a deed which allows him to remain in possession of them on payment of such a composition as is satisfactory to six-sevenths of the creditors. . . . . The section cautiously and anxiously guards against the supposition that the deed to be protected must embrace all the matters which it enumerates." And the Court of Queen's Bench held in that case, that a deed providing for the payment of a composition of 7*s.* 6*d.* in the pound on the trader's debts, assented to by six-sevenths of the creditors, and duly notified to the others, was binding on all.

But in Drew v. Collins (6 Exch. 670) a similar deed, providing for the release of the debtor on his paying a composition of 6*s.* 8*d.* in the pound, and duly executed by six-sevenths of the creditors, was held not to bind the dissenting creditors, the Court being of opinion that the only reasonable and proper construction of the statute was, that there could be no valid arrangement by deed unless the whole of the trader's estate was distributed among his creditors; and it was remarked that in sect. 114, which provides for arrangements under the sanction of the Court of Bankruptcy, the words are much larger than in sect. 224, but the composition is binding only if approved of by the Court.

After this Tetley v. Taylor was carried to the Exchequer Chamber, and it was decided that the deed must provide for the distribution of all the trader's estate. But the Court suggested that it might be no objection to such a deed that the distribution of the estate was left to the debtor, if he was bound to distribute the whole; and on the correctness of this suggestion depends the validity of the many deeds of arrangement which have been executed with a view to bind all the creditors under these clauses.

Tetley v. Taylor has been strictly followed in subsequent cases. In Fisher v. Bell (12 C. B. 363) a deed of composition was, of course, held to be invalid. In Cooper v. Thornton (1 El. & Bl. 544) the deed assigned all the trader's effects to trustees for the benefit of his creditors rateably, but provided that it should be lawful for the trustees to make to the debtor such allowance, or to return to him such part of his household furniture or effects, not exceeding the value of 20*l.*, as they might deem expedient. This discretionary power to the trustees was held to defeat the operation of the deed under the arrangement clauses.

In March v. Warwick (1 H. & Norm. 158) an exception of the wearing apparel of the debtor and his family was considered to take the deed out of the arrangement clauses. The deed was, however, objectionable also on the ground that it provided for the distribution of the estate among the executing creditors only.

Thus it appears that a trader who proposes to take advantage of these clauses must place himself in a worse position than he would be in in bankruptcy. He cannot reserve his wearing apparel or any part of his furniture, and he cannot stipulate for an allowance for his bare subsistence.

In Ex parte Wilkes (5 De G., Mac., & G. 418) the debtor covenanted to pay his debts in full by certain instalments, and to carry on and wind up his business under inspection, and that if he should be taken in execution, or for any other cause the inspectors should think such a course advisable, the inspectors might take possession of and administer his estate for the benefit of the creditors. The deed authorised the debtor to retain a weekly allowance for himself and his family, and to retain the dividends on the debts of non-executing creditors until they should execute the deed. The deed was, therefore, clearly invalid, but the grounds on which it was held to be so are not very clearly defined in the reported judgments of the Lords Justices. Sir G. J. Turner, L. J.—"I think the estate must be given up to the creditors in all events, and not in certain events only, and in terms which are clear and unequivocal, and not open to future dispute or difficulty. This deed does not appear to me to amount to such a disposition of this trader's estate. Independently of any other considerations arising on it, I think it at least open to doubt whether, in the event of this trader's death within the three years mentioned in the deed, the trustees could recover any part of the property against the representatives of the petitioner, in whom it would be legally vested."

In the same case it was held that the commissioner in bankruptcy might look into the deed, and was not bound to certify that the deed had been executed by the required number of creditors, unless he was satisfied that it was a deed within the meaning of the act.

It is perfectly clear that the deed must not confine its benefits to the executing or assenting creditors, but must provide for the distribution of the estate among all the creditors. (Bloomer v. Darke, 2 C. B., N. S., 165).

The provisions in the act are defective in not defining the time or event which is to determine the class of creditors to come in under the deed. But it is presumed that the time would be held to be the time of execution by the debtor, and that creditors becoming so after that time would be excluded; or, if the deed expressly provided for the admission of subsequent creditors, it would be invalid. In Macnaught v. Russell (1 H. & Norm. 611) a deed dated the 1st February, 1856, provided that the trader's works should be carried on for the benefit of his creditors, and his estate distributed as if he had been adjudged bankrupt on the 12th February, 1856, and as if the debts of creditors, parties thereto, had been the debts proved under the bankruptcy. The creditors covenanted not to sue, and that, if they sued, their covenant might be pleaded as a release, and their debts should be forfeited. The deed was not set out fully on the plea; and to an objection on demurrer, that the deed only provided for the creditors who were parties, the Court answered, that taking the whole statement in the plea, that did not appear to be so. It was no objection that there was no provision for creditors coming in between the 1st and the 12th, because it did not appear that there were any such creditors; and the provision for forfeiture of the debts of creditors suing was not unreasonable, because only binding on the executing creditors. It was further held, that as only one notice of the deed is required, that can be a notice only of the execution of it by the trader, and not of its execution by six-sevenths of the creditors. The three months run from the notice of the suspension of payment and that the deed is ready for execution. (See March v. Higgins, 9 C. B. 551).

The suspension of payment referred to incidentally in the 225th section is either an actual stoppage of payment, or the state of things contemplated in the preceding section—inability to pay debts. The execution of the deed is a sufficient suspension of payment to give the Court jurisdiction to grant the certificate. (Phillips v. Surridge, 9 C. B. 743). In pleading the deed, it is unnecessary to set out the clauses, or the names of the assenting creditors. (Ib.)

As to the practice in opposition to the certificate, see Ex parte Mortimer (3 De G. & S. 649) and Ex parte Lees, (4 De G. & S. 284).

As to the retrospective operation of the act, see Largent v. Bibby, (5 H. L. C. 481); March v. Higgins, (9 C. B. 551); and Waugh v. Middleton, (8 Exch. 352).

THE JURIST.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 21, 1857.

ON a former occasion (2 Jur., N. S., part 2, p. 343) we offered some observations on the case of Benson v. Paul, (6 El. & Bl. 273; 2 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 425), and submitted that the Court of Queen's Bench had placed too narrow a construction upon the mandamus clauses in the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, (sects. 68—77). The actual decision in that case was, that a mandamus would not be granted under the act to compel specific performance of a contract by which the defendant agreed to accept a lease from the plaintiff; but a dictum in the judgment of Lord Campbell, C. J., went far beyond the decision, and was to the effect, that a mandamus under the act could be granted only in the cases in which the prerogative writ of mandamus was grantable before the act. This case, however, was recently brought before the same Court, (Norris v. The Irish Land Company, Nov. 17), and Lord Campbell, C. J., took the opportunity of stating, that, on consideration, he felt that this dictum could not be supported; and both his Lordship and the other learned judges of the court expressed their opinion that the words used by the Legislature were wide enough to include cases to which the prerogative writ of mandamus was not applicable. The precise limits, however, within which this extended remedy will be applied were not defined by the Court, nor was it necessary to define them for the decision of the case then before the Court. The declaration stated the incorporation by royal charter of the Irish Land Company, and that by such charter a deed of settlement was to be executed, containing provision (among other things) for the registration of shareholders. The administrator of a deceased shareholder required the company to register him as owner of the shares pursuant to the deed, and on their refusal claimed a mandamus for that purpose. On demurrer to this claim the Court said that they thought a mandamus would have been granted under these circumstances before the act in question; that a register of shareholders is a matter of a public nature, (see Reg. v. The Derbyshire Railway Company, 23 L. J., Q. B., 333); that there is no real distinction between a company incorporated by charter and by statute; and that the remedy by mandamus had been considerably extended in modern times on account of its beneficial character. They were further of opinion, that at all events, since the statute, a mandamus might be claimed in the case before them, as the duty to be performed was a simple act, not requiring the machinery of a Court of Chancery, or the exercise of any powers beyond those possessed by a Court of common law.

It is true that in Rex v. The London Insurance Company (5 B. & Al. 899) a prerogative writ of mandamus was refused under somewhat similar circumstances, upon the ground that it would not lie to regulate the internal affairs of a company. To the same effect is Rex v. The Bank of England, (2 B. & Al. 620), but that case also involved the taking an account. (See also Rex v. Clear, 7 D. & Ry. 395, and Ex parte Robins, 7 Dowl. 56). On the other hand, it is stated in Com. Dig., tit. "Mandamus," A., that the writ lies to enforce execution of the King's charter; and in an anonymous case (2 Str. 696) it was granted to swear in a director of the Amicable Insurance Company, created by royal charter. In Rex v. The Worcester Canal Company (1 Man. & R. 529) this writ went to compel the company to register the probate of the will of a deceased shareholder; and in several modern cases rules have been granted for writs of mandamus to compel the registration of transfers of shares, and no objection has been made that the writ would not lie. (See Reg. v. The Londonderry Railway Company, 13 Q. B. 998; In re Hall, 21 L. J., Q. B., 94; Reg. v. The Liverpool Railway Company, Id. 284; and Reg. v. The General Cemetery Company, 25 L. J., Q. B., 342).

NOTES OF RECENT CASES.

THE case of Chapman v. *Van Toll came before the Court of Queen's Bench on the 9th instant, and, as had been generally anticipated, the ruling of Lord Campbell, C. J., at the trial was unanimously overruled by his three learned brethren, Coleridge, Wightman, and Erle, JJ. It will be remembered by our readers that the plaintiff, an attorney, sued the defendant for the amount of his bill of costs, and the defence was, that he had been guilty of such gross negligence as to disentitle him to recover them. It appeared that the plaintiff had been retained by the defendant to sue a debtor on a bond, and that after the writ had been accordingly issued, the debtor wrote to the attorney stating that he had paid a portion of such bond, and was willing to pay the residue, and the attorney then delivered the declaration, and proceeded in the ordinary course to trial; but when the time for execution came the debtor absconded, and no satisfaction of the judgment could be obtained. It was now contended that the attorney, on receiving the debtor's letter admitting part liability, should have proceeded, under the compulsory clauses of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, to refer the cause, instead of submitting the claim to a jury, and that not having done so, he could not recover his costs. Of this opinion was Lord Campbell, and the jury accordingly found for the defendant; but a new trial has now been granted on the ground of misdirection, inasmuch as the question in dispute was not so clearly "a matter of mere account, which could not be conveniently tried in the ordinary way," (sect. 3 of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854), as to deprive the attorney of reward for his labour, or to expose him to an action for negligence. It was in fact as simple a case as a jury could have to try. It may be added, that it is very doubtful, upon the facts, whether, if the case had been referred, the debt would ever have been satisfied.

In Swinfen v. Swinfen the Master of the Rolls has refused to decree specific performance of the compromise entered into by Mrs. Swinfen's legal advisers, and has directed a new trial of the issue devisavit vel non.

The question as to what is a sufficient impounding of a distress for rent came before the Court of Queen's Bench on the 3rd instant, in the case of Tennant v. Field. A landlord had sent a person to distrain for rent; an inventory was taken and a man put in possession, but by the tenant's request nothing was removed. It was held that this was an impounding under the 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, and that the landlord was not bound afterwards to accept a tender of the rent.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—The Court for the consideration of Crown Cases Reserved is one of high authority; its decisions are declaratory of the criminal law, and from those decisions there is no appeal. Its extreme usefulness in this respect cannot be overvalued, for it must be admitted that certainty in the definition of offences, and the amount of evidence necessary to sustain convictions—the two points to which the attention of that Court is principally directed—is a great desideratum in the administration of the criminal law. A Court, therefore, which enjoys these high powers should be as perfect as possible, not only in its constitution, of which no one can complain, but also in the means it has of arriving at correct conclusions. In this latter particular I think it is somewhat deficient, and I allude to the fact that all cases are not argued by counsel. It is a frequent occurrence that counsel are not instructed on either side, and in the majority of cases only on one side, generally for the prisoner. Thus, at the last sitting, (Saturday, the 14th inst.), three cases came before the Court in which no counsel appeared for the Crown, and in which, therefore, their Lordships were left to find arguments and hunt up cases in support of the convictions. Now, surely this is a state of things which ought not to exist. The research of counsel, and the full discussion which appertains to arguments on both sides, ought to be brought to bear upon questions the decisions of which are for ever after established authorities, upon which courts of assize and the sessions are bound to act. As regards prisoners, I can understand that their means will not always admit of counsel being instructed, but that is not so as regards the Crown. What I would suggest, therefore, is, that in all cases reserved, the counsel who have been engaged in the court below should be instructed to appear in the argument of the case; and if it should happen that there has been no prosecuting counsel below, then one, say the senior, should be selected from the assize or sessions bar. It might also be well that in cases of real poverty on the part of prisoners, counsel should be assigned them. It should be the duty of the clerks of assize on the circuits, and clerks of the peace at sessions, to see that every case reserved from their respective courts should be thus duly argued by counsel. My object, however, in addressing you is to point out what appears to me a serious defect in the working of the present system. The defect once acknowledged, a remedy may easily be found.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—The author of the article in to-day's JURIST on "Arrangements by Deed under the Bankrupt-law Consolidation Act, 1849," has overlooked the Amendment Act, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 119, the 25th section of which allows a bankrupt to retain 20*l.* worth of "household furniture, and tools, implements of trade, and other like necessaries, as he shall specify and select." I apprehend that a deed of arrangement made since the above statute would now be valid, although it allowed the debtor to retain 20*l.* worth of things.

I am &c.,

Nov. 14. M.

[The article sufficiently shews that the writer had the 25th section of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 119, in his mind, since it points out the difference between the position of a debtor under an arrangement deed, and that of a bankrupt under that act, in these words:—"Hence it appears that a trader who proposes to take advantage of these clauses must place himself in a worse position than he would be in in bankruptcy.

* This case will be reported in our next number.

He cannot reserve his wearing apparel, or any part of his furniture, and he cannot stipulate for an allowance for his bare subsistence." In March v. Warwick (1 H. & Norm. 158) it was held, that an exception of the necessary wearing apparel of the bankrupt and his family invalidated the deed. But when that deed was executed the law allowed a bankrupt to retain such apparel; and this was urged with great force in favour of the provisions in the deed. We think, however, that these decisions require to be reconsidered, or, which would be better, the act should be redrawn by a competent hand.—Ed.]

THE JURIST.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 28, 1857.

EVERY decision coming from a judge of such high reputation as Sir William Page Wood carries with it so much weight, and is so likely to be followed in practice without apprehension, that it is more important to call attention to anything coming from him that may appear questionable, than if it came from a quarter entitled to less respect. We are further emboldened to make some observations on the decision to which we are about to refer, by the fact, that in the case of Lake v. Brutton (2 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 839) Sir J. L. Knight Bruce, L. J., during the course of the argument, made some observations clearly shewing that he was disposed to consider that decision erroneous, and Sir G. J. Turner, L. J., appeared to regard it as very questionable. It was not, however, necessary to determine the point, and it was not alluded to in the judgments.

The case above referred to (Newton v. Chorlton, 10 Hare, 646) raised this short point, whether a creditor whose debt was secured by the bond of the principal debtor and a surety, and who long after the execution of the bond took from the principal debtor an equitable mortgage by way of further security for the debt, had in any degree affected his rights against the surety by giving up the mortgage. The Vice-Chancellor held that he had not. The mortgage was not voluntarily given up with the intention of releasing it, but the benefit of it was lost by a careless parting with the title deeds. The principles, however, on which the judgment proceeded apply equally to the case of a voluntary release, and it does not appear that the circumstance of the loss having been occasioned by laches rather than by a wilful act, need for our present purpose be further adverted to.

The grounds upon which the learned judge proceeded were stated by him in a very elaborate judgment. He considered it settled that a surety is entitled to the benefit of all securities held by the creditor for the debt at the time the contract for suretyship is entered into, whether at the time he knew of their existence or not, and that the creditor cannot deal with them so as to deprive the surety of the benefit of them. He also considered that the cases established the right of a surety, on paying off the debt, to have an assignment of all securities then held by the creditor, including those subsequent to the suretyship; but that as regarded such subsequent securities, no case established that the surety had any right at all until he took some active step to get the benefit of them; while the case of Wade v. Coope (2 Sim. 155) was the other way. His Honor, therefore, held that the surety cannot complain if the creditor, at some time subsequent to the contract of suretyship, takes securities from the principal, and then gives them back, such a proceeding not altering the position of the surety under the original contract.

This decision was not appealed from, but we have been informed that the case was compromised. It is certainly unfortunate that a point of such interest was thus prevented from coming before a superior court.

It has been well observed by one of the Lords Justices, that it can seldom be right to consider the extent of a rule as being only that of the examples of it; though there must probably be surer and more dangerous error in stretching a rule beyond the reason for it. It must be admitted that none of the instances do carry the rule as to the rights of a surety beyond the extent to which it has been limited by the Vice-Chancellor; but the question remains, whether to carry the rule further would be stretching it beyond the reason for it, and whether, in fact, the reason does not require the giving to the rule a wider extent than he has allowed to it.

Now, on what reason is the admitted rule, that the surety is entitled to the benefit of the securities held by the creditor at the time of the suretyship being entered into, founded? Not on contract, but, as it has been repeatedly laid down, on natural equity; and the principle was thus enunciated by Sir G. J. Turner, L. J., when Vice-Chancellor, in Yonge v. Reynell, (9 Hare, 809):—"As between the principal and the surety, the principal is under an obligation to indemnify the surety, and it is, as I conceive, from this obligation that the right of the surety to the benefit of securities held by the creditor is derived. The principle is not, I think, much dissimilar to that which applies where a man directs part of his estate to be employed in carrying on a trade, in which case the creditors of the trade have a right to resort to that part of the estate, because the trustees have a right to be indemnified out of it." If this be the principle, it appears to apply to the case of a subsequent further security taken by the creditor from the principal debtor, as much as to securities existing when the suretyship was entered into. The principal is under an obligation to indemnify the surety; therefore the surety has a right to say, as between himself and the principal, that the securities given by the principal shall be first resorted to; and it is difficult to see what their dates have to do with the application of the principle.

Again: it is admitted by the Vice-Chancellor that the surety may at any time, if he chooses to take active proceedings, obtain the benefit of all subsequent securities then held by the creditor. It may be law, but it does not seem consistent with reason or convenience, to hold that the creditor may at any time, by his own voluntary act, without the surety's assent, take away this right. A mere omission to enforce the securities, even though they may thereby be lost, is quite another matter, it being admitted that a creditor is not bound to use diligence against the principal unless the surety calls upon him to do so.

The surety having thus, ex concessis, a right at any time to obtain the benefit of all securities held by the creditor, whether contemporaneous with the contract of suretyship or subsequent, on what is the distinction to be founded that the creditor, though he may defeat this right as to the subsequent securities, cannot do so as to the earlier ones? If the rule had been that the surety was only to have the benefit of those earlier securities of which he knew, then a satisfactory answer might have been given, for it would have been said, "The surety contracted his suretyship knowing that there were certain securities given by the principal to the creditor; he contracted with a view to those securities, and the creditor is not to be permitted to alter the state of things on the faith of which the surety contracted." It is settled, however, that the creditor cannot, without releasing the surety, give up securities which he held at the time of the contract, whether the surety knew of their existence or not; so that the distinction cannot turn on the point that the surety contracted with regard to them. In reply to this it has been urged, that the utmost good faith is supposed to exist between the contracting parties, and that the law therefore presumes that the surety is made acquainted with all the securities which the creditor then has. It seems to us that this is a technical way of arriving at a conclusion which is better arrived at by the application of a principle commending itself to the common sense of mankind; and such the principle laid down by Sir G. J. Turner, L. J., and referred to above, appears to be. The technical way does not seem to us to be satisfactory even as a technical way. Good faith, no doubt, requires that a person who is asked to become a surety should be informed of every circumstance that may tend to his injury; but we cannot see what moral obligation there is to inform him of all the circumstances which tend to render the suretyship less dangerous. If the rule only were, that in the absence of any evidence to the contrary it should be presumed that the surety was informed of the existence of the securities, and was to be treated as having entered into his contract on the faith of them, that would be founded on reason; for it is probable that he would be informed of them, as a motive to induce him to become surety. The rule, however, is not so confined; it is broadly laid down by Lord Eldon that it is immaterial whether the surety knows of them or not. We think the duty of the other parties to inform him of them can only arise from his having a lien upon them; and that his lien does not arise from its being the duty of the other parties to tell him of them, but from the natural right to have the liability discharged by the person and out of the property primarily liable.

We think that on reviewing all the cases so elaborately commented upon by the Vice-Chancellor, (except Wade v. Coope, which we shall presently consider), there is nothing to conflict with the view, that the true principle is, that the surety has, independently of contract, a right to be indemnified against the debt by the principal debtor; that he has, therefore, as between himself and the debtor, a right to throw the demand upon the securities for the debtor held by the creditor, at whatever time created; and that the creditor, though he is not bound to observe this order, nor bound to exert diligence to recover the demand from the principal or his property, yet is bound not to take any active step by which the right of the surety against the principal or his securities may be defeated. The rules on this subject are said to be founded on natural equity; and we say, without fear of contradiction, that it is against natural equity and against conscience that a creditor, who after the contract of suretyship obtains from the principal debtor a security sufficient to cover his demand, should voluntarily release this security and go against the surety. As between the surety and the principal, the securities given by the principal are the primary fund for the payment of the debt; and it seems to be contrary to those principles on which the ordinary doctrines as to marshalling assets are founded to hold that the creditor has a right, by active steps, to throw the ultimate burthen of the debt upon the person secondarily liable.

The case of Wade v. Coope (2 Sim. 155) appears to have been regarded by the Vice-Chancellor as an authority against the surety, which, in the absence of direct authority in the surety's favour, he was bound to follow. We think, however, if we may presume to dispute the Vice-Chancellor's opinion on such a point, that on examination that case can hardly be considered to be of any authority on the question. In the first place it must be observed, that the Vice-Chancellor of England states, in terms, that the bond in which the surety was bound was given in respect of one part of the debt, and the mortgage of which the surety claimed the benefit in respect of another part of it; and the judgment appears almost entirely to turn, and as the marginal note shews was understood by the reporter to turn, on the point, that the bond and mortgage were not securities for the same debt. How far this was a correct view of the facts may admit of doubt; but we think that every one reading the judgment will be of opinion that the leading idea in the Vice-Chancellor's mind was, that there was a want of sufficient identity between the debt secured by the bond and the debt secured by the mortgage, and that he laid comparatively little stress on the difference in point of date. If he intended (which we do not think he did) that his judgment should apply to the simple case of a subsequent security given for the debt for which the surety is liable, it appears to us to lay down a proposition which goes far beyond what Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., treated it as establishing—a proposition which, according to the view of the law taken by Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., himself, is opposed to the current of the decided cases, and which, therefore, is no authority for anything. The Vice-Chancellor of England first states the established doctrine to be, "that where a man becomes the surety for a debtor for the payment of a debt, he has, if he pays the debt, a right to avail himself of all the securities which the creditor has." Then, if we omit all that relates to the security being for a different sum, the substance of the rest of the judgment is, that this doctrine does not apply where the security is given subsequently to the contract of suretyship. Now, in Wade v. Coope, the question did not, as in Newton v. Chorlton, relate to the obligation of the creditor to preserve the security for the surety. The surety had paid what he was liable for, and had become transferee of the security. The proposition in Wade v. Coope, then, assuming that the Vice-Chancellor of England meant his observations to apply to the simple case above supposed, is, that the surety, paying off the debt, is not entitled to claim the benefit of such subsequent security, though in existence at the time when he pays the debt—a proposition which is in direct opposition to one of the rules stated by Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., (see 10 Hare, 656, 660), to be established by the cases.

We think, then, that Wade v. Coope cannot be treated as any authority on the question, and it is much to be regretted that so much weight was given to it, when, as it seems to us, principle would have led to an opposite conclusion, and one at which the other cases would not have prevented the Court from arriving.

THE EXETER HALL SERVICES.

The following is a copy of the letter addressed to the Bishop of London by the incumbent of St. Michael's, Strand:—

"My Lord Bishop,—I have already been in correspondence with your Lordship in reference to the proposed series of services on Sunday evenings in Exeter Hall, which, as your Lordship knows, is situated in my parish, to be conducted by several of the metropolitan clergy and others from various parts of the kingdom. The promoters of this movement having issued placards notifying to the public that these services will take place under your Lordship's sanction, commencing on Sunday next, but without any assent from me, as incumbent of the parish, I am forced into the painful position of either abandoning my duty as such incumbent, or of acting in apparent opposition and antagonism to you as my diocesan, by interposing my veto, which I am well advised will render the proposed meetings illegal. Nevertheless, however painful the position, no other alternative is left me but to notify to your Lordship, with all due respect, that I do not assent to any services being conducted within my parish except by myself or curate, or solely by your Lordship, as my diocesan.

"In thus protesting against public preaching within my parish by strange clergymen, and in an unconsecrated building, I am only upholding the parochial system which for many centuries has been maintained inviolable throughout England, and am setting my face against a proceeding altogether irregular, and which, if permitted, would prove thoroughly subversive of all discipline and order in the church, and would tend, beyond all conception, to destroy that form of sound words so essential to the purity and power of our branch of Christ's church.

"I am perfectly aware that the originators and promoters of the Exeter Hall Sunday services assert that the provisions of the act 18 & 19 Vict. c. 86, render my assent unnecessary. If so, why, may I ask, was it so urgently solicited last summer, and the fact of my consent announced in the advertisement? That I did then give my consent—my very reluctant consent, as is well known—I readily admit, but it was by way of experiment only, and that experiment so utterly failed that I now feel doubly called upon to interpose the veto which I possess.

"I am advised that beyond all question the above act of Parliament in no way dispenses with the necessity of my sanction being obtained. That act, as I am informed upon competent authority, merely renders inoperative the provisions of three previous statutes, one of which, as appears from the title, is only for Protestant Dissenters, and the two others (irrespective of the internal evidence to the like effect) have been judicially declared by Lord Hardwicke and by Sir John Nicholl (as judge of the Court of Arches) not to relate to the clergy of the Church of England. Upon this point I cannot do better than quote the words of the late Justice Bayley in the case of Farnworth v. The Bishop of Chester, (4 B. & Cr. 555). He says, (p. 570), 'If the vicar has the cure of souls co-extensive with the whole limits of his parish, that casts a very serious and important duty upon him, and he has a right, and is bound, as the conservator parochiæ, to take care that no person shall deliver doctrine in that parish except under his sanction and authority. It is said that the bishop will never appoint an unfit person; but if the vicar has the cure of souls in the parish he has a right to act on his own judgment, and is not bound to trust to the judgment of the ordinary.' I also take the liberty of mentioning the following cases, all of which have reference to points now brought forward:—Rex v. The Bishop of London, (1 T. R. 331); Dr. Trebec v. Keith, (2 Atk. 498); Moysey v. Hilcoat, (2 Hagg. 30); Bliss v. Words, (3 Hagg. 486); Carr v. Marsh, (2 Phillim. 198); and Barnes v. Shore, (8 Ad. & El. 640).

"Under these circumstances, I have felt it my duty (acting under the advice of counsel) to give notice to the Rev. T. H. Davies, whose name is announced as intending to preach in Exeter Hall on Sunday next, informing him of my objection to his so doing; and I most earnestly hope that your Lordship will, by the interposition of your authority, relieve me from the painful necessity of any further proceedings, which my exceedingly limited means will be little qualified to carry forward, however much I may deem my duty as incumbent of the parish to be paramount to all other considerations.

"In conclusion, I have but to add that I must beg to reserve to myself the right of making what use of this letter circumstances may require.

"I have the honour to be, with every feeling of profound respect, my Lord Bishop, your Lordship's ever most faithful and very dutiful servant,

"A. G. Edouart."

THE STATE TRIALS.

THE State Trials, taken in the mass, are of no authority whatever. We should, indeed, be very glad to hear of any one who would conduct a critical inquiry into the origin of the several reports which constitute these trials, who would ascertain for us the names of the writers, the circumstances under which they were written, the present resting-places of the original MSS., (where these are known to exist), and who would give us an account of such other reports of the events described as remain either in MS. or in print, in public or private depositories. Some of these are in the British Museum—some in the State Paper Office. Lambeth may throw light on a few cases—the Bodleian on many. Private collections would also help. We recommend this investigation to the learned correspondents of Notes and Queries. What is now popularly known of the State Trials is not in favour of their credit. Some of them—for example, the reports of the trials of Essex, of Raleigh, of the Gunpowder Conspirators—are mere Ministerial versions of these transactions, cooked and arranged to deceive the public. Others again—to name only the trial of Bushel, in the famous jury case—are the laborious and one-sided defence of the parties charged. A barrister's speech for his client might be cited in evidence with as much justice as any of these. The same must be said of the trials of the Earl and Countess of Somerset. When an Amos or a Jardine opens a page of the State Trials, it is to shew that the facts are falsely stated. Until the State Trials are subjected to critical inquiry, individually or collectively, they will remain of slight value to the historian, and the facts they assert can never be received without due corroboration.—Athenæum, (Nov. 14), No. 1568, p. 1417.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, DECEMBER 5, 1857.

A rebuke from so eminent and excellent a judge as Mr. Justice Erle cannot fall unheeded, or be allowed to pass without respectful consideration on the part of the legal Profession. There is no judge on the Bench more distinguished for his courtesy and kindness to the Bar; there is not one who commands more deservedly, not only the esteem, but the admiration of its members. It is therefore we feel that his Lordship's censure upon the misuse of a counsel's privilege in the examination of witnesses comes with peculiar force, and presents claims of no ordinary character upon our attention. Without reference to the special occasion which called forth the rebuke—and with the circumstances of which we are not sufficiently acquainted to offer any opinion—it cannot be denied that in many instances the liberty of counsel degenerates into license; that it is used, not for the furtherance of justice, but for the wounding of sensitive feelings, the unnecessary exposure of faults or misfortunes, the raking up of sorrowful events in a man's life long since repented of, long since atoned for, long since forgotten by all but the harbourers of ill concerning others, who are ever ready to reproduce it when it is capable of inflicting the greatest injury. But while we make this admission to its full extent, and lament the necessity for making it, we must still assert, notwithstanding the prevalent notions to the contrary, that the privileges of counsel are comparatively but seldom abused, and that they are in general exercised, within proper limits, by educated and honourable gentlemen. These privileges, moreover, are the privileges of the public, intended for their benefit, and not for the pleasure or profit of the advocate; unnecessarily, therefore, to interfere with them would be to the injury of the public, and not to the detriment of the Bar. It must also be borne in mind that the barrister has no easy duty to perform in the extrication of truth from the circumstances cast around it by interest, by malice, by human passion, and in the exposure and defeat of falsehood, with its plausible cunning and its barefaced effrontery. This duty, arduous and painful enough, he is often called upon to fulfil on hasty instructions, or, it may be, on suggestions made at the moment when the witness appears in the box.

Several of our journalists who write so freely upon the "license of counsel," which has become a sort of cant term, would do well to remember these difficulties which beset the advocate, and at the same time to give a better example by restraining their own license in offering reckless and unjust comments upon the judges of the land, as well as upon the Bar, and, above all, in prejudging and condemning those who are accused of crime before they have had an opportunity of being heard in their defence.

With regard to derogatory questions which may be properly put to witnesses by counsel, we apprehend that in the majority of cases there can be little difficulty in adopting the right course. The first consideration for the advocate will be, is this question relevant—that is, does it affect the credit of the witness? If not, certainly refuse to ask it. It is difficult, for instance, to see how a question whether the witness is in difficulties can discredit him, even if it produce an answer in the affirmative. He may be in hopeless embarrassment, and yet speak the truth to its fullest extent. So, to ask a man whether he has been charged with an offence, unless he has also been convicted of it, is not only irrelevant, but most unjust, for the best men are liable to be wrongfully accused; but if acquitted by the only competent tribunal appointed to decide upon their innocence or guilt, the accusation should never again be mentioned save in terms of commiseration. The second consideration should be, supposing the suggestion to be relevant, is it true? For the purpose of satisfying himself upon this point, the advocate should carefully probe the means of knowledge possessed by him who suggests the question. Let him cross-examine the attorney upon the subject as closely as he cross-examines adverse witnesses, and only in the event of conviction being brought home to his own mind, that there is foundation beyond all reasonable doubt for the charge, let him put and press the question.

With these limitations this privilege must and may safely be left where it is, in the hands of the Bar, for the benefit of the public and the due administration of justice.

It has often been found a matter of difficulty in practice to determine whether proceedings might be taken to enforce an award before the time which is allowed for setting it aside had elapsed. Before the Common-law Procedure Acts, and the Rules of Practice made under them, a distinction was supposed to exist between cases in which a verdict had been taken subject to a reference, and in which no verdict had been taken, or the cause and matters in difference had been referred; (see Hare v. Fleay, 2 Lownd., M., & P. 392; Jones v. Ives, 10 C. B. 429; Hobdell v. Miller, 2 Scott's N. R. 163); but by Reg. Gen., Hil. T., 1853, r. 170, "costs may be taxed on an award notwithstanding the time for setting aside the award has not elapsed." This was, at all events, permitting a step to be taken towards the enforcement of the award during the period for setting it aside, but still it was not clear that you could go beyond the taxation of costs in all cases until that period had expired. The case, however, of O'Toole v. Pott (7 El. & Bl. 102; 3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 261) puts the question beyond all doubt, and lays down one uniform rule in all cases of awards, viz. that if a verdict has been taken subject to a reference, the award may be enforced at the expiration of fourteen days after the publication of the award; (see the Common-law Procedure Act, 1852, s. 120); but if no verdict has been taken, then the award may be enforced at any time after publication. In the above case a verdict had been taken in vacation, subject to the award of an arbitrator, to whom the cause and all matters in difference were referred. The award having been made before the next term, the plaintiff, in whose favour it was made, signed judgment at the end of fourteen days, and was held justified in so doing. Lord Campbell, C. J., in delivering the judgment of the Court, said, "No reason has been suggested why a creditor, who has established his right, should be thus delayed in enforcing it. The limitation of time for moving to set aside an award was intended to aid the successful party, and make his title secure after that time, but was not intended to give insecurity in favour of a debtor who had been adjudged to be liable. The award is to be taken to be valid until a competent tribunal has questioned its validity, and stayed proceedings upon it. In respect to verdicts subject to a reference, they are not considered verdicts till the award has been made."

THE BISHOP OF EXETER UPON THE NEW DIVORCE ACT.

The Bishop of Exeter has written and published a long letter to the Archdeacon of Barnstable, and the clergy of that archdeaconry, in answer to an address requiring the bishop's advice on a subject which greatly "disquiets and distresses them—namely, the 58th clause of the Divorce and Matrimonial Act, by which any clergyman entitled to officiate within any diocese is authorised to intrude into any other parish of the same diocese for the purpose of performing the marriage service between parties 'whose former marriage has been dissolved on the ground of his or her adultery,' whenever the minister of the parish shall have refused to perform the said service."

The bishop expresses his sympathy with the clergy on this occasion, but is of opinion that little, if any, practical evil can flow from the clause in question, inasmuch as he does not suppose that any clergyman of the Established Church will perform the ceremony of marriage for a divorced woman—at all events, in the church of a clergyman who has refused to perform it. He is, however, of opinion that the clause is highly objectionable in point of principle, as violating the parochial system, and believes that it was inconsiderately framed and adopted.

"That the 58th clause," he says, "was hastily and without due consideration introduced and passed would appear from internal evidence, even if we were ignorant of the history of the proceeding—from the absence, I mean, of any of those provisions which must have accompanied it if it had been intended to produce the mischief which you with too much reason deprecate; for in that case any clergyman whatever would have been permitted to perform the marriage service, instead of 'any minister entitled to officiate within the diocese;' in other words, any incumbent, or licensed curate, or assistant to any incumbent, for no other is 'entitled to officiate,' even if he could in any case officiate, without subjecting himself to ecclesiastical censures. This alone is no light security. In truth, I know not, and should be very sorry to know, any single incumbent or curate of my diocese whom I could lightly suspect of being either so unmindful of what he owes to his brethren, or so heedless of his own character, as voluntarily to incur the odium which would most justly attach to a clergyman intruding into the church of another for the purpose of performing a service which the proper minister deems unfit to be performed in it.

"In particular, with reference to our present subject, no one having the slightest sense of decency or self-respect could hire himself out for the express purpose of calling on 'God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost' to bless an union founded on the notorious violation of the marriage vow by one at least of the parties, most commonly with the partner of her guilt—an union which thus would be little better than one continued life-long adultery—an union which implies an utter abnegation of repentance for past sin, on the woman's part at least—a flinging to the winds of that 'spiritual benediction and grace' which was before invoked for her, that she and her former partner might 'so live together in this life that in the world to come they might have life everlasting.'"

The bishop feels it his duty to do all in his power to co-operate with others in marking their common reprobation of the principle involved in the clause; hopes to confine such marriages to the registrar's office; and, indeed, inclines to the opinion that they cannot be lawfully celebrated in church.

"I therefore here announce to you that no such marriage will in this diocese, during my episcopate, be performed by license. A marriage license is not an instrument which can be claimed as of right. It issues in the name of the bishop, who thereby declares himself 'willing, that the desires of the applicants may the more speedily obtain due effect without the publication of banns.'

"Now, as I cannot truly say that I am thus 'willing,' I cannot consent to the issuing of a license in such a case in my name; and I rejoice to know that my vicar-general, to whom the power of granting licenses is intrusted by his patent, agrees with me as to the fitness of withholding them in the case of any person divorced for his or her adultery.

"This will probably have the wholesome effect of confining these marriages to the registrar's office, for it can hardly be imagined that any woman who retains the slightly particle of womanly modesty will choose to have her shame proclaimed again and again in the house of God at the time of public worship and in the hearing of all the people, who are thereby invited to declare whether they 'know any cause or just impediment' why she and her paramour 'should not be joined together in holy matrimony.' This very phrase, 'holy matrimony,' suggests another grave consideration. Is the marriage of a divorced woman forbidden by God's law? I do not say that it is; but neither do I venture to say, in the face of great authority to the contrary, that it is not. But if it is, the recent statute, which makes such marriage lawful in spite of God's law, does not make lawful the solemnisation of it in the house of God; for the Act of Uniformity not being repealed, the new act must be so construed as shall make it consistent, where it is possible, with the former; but the former, speaking in the rubric, says, that 'if at the day of marriage any man do allege the impediment of its being contrary to God's law, and put in a caution, (to the full value of the charges), then the solemnisation must be deferred until such time as the truth be tried.' How this trial is to be had, in what court, and by what process, it is for lawyers to say. It is enough for me to cite the words of the law itself.

"But neither is this all. I apprehend that if to marry a divorced woman is 'forbidden by God's word,' such marriage solemnised in church is unlawful, and being unlawful is also absolutely void. But that it is unlawful the Prayer-book, which is part of the Act of Uniformity, expressly declares, for it requires the minister to say unto the person that shall be married, 'Be ye well assured that so many as are coupled together otherwise than God's word doth allow are not joined together by God; neither is their matrimony lawful.' When, therefore, the 57th section of the new act says that when any marriage shall have been declared by the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes to be dissolved, 'it shall be lawful for the respective parties thereto to marry again, as if the prior marriage had been dissolved by death,' this must be made consistent with the Act of Uniformity, and can only be so made by the new marriage being contracted as a civil contract, with all the civil effects of marriage, before the registrar, without any religious ceremony.

"Nor is this contrary to anything in the 58th section, which requires 'any minister of any church who shall refuse to perform the marriage service to permit any other minister,' within the description there given, 'to perform such service.' For this permission is to be given only in the case of 'any persons who but for such refusal would be entitled to have the same service performed in such church or chapel;' and certainly no persons can be entitled thereto if the marriage be 'forbidden by the word of God.'

"It follows, therefore, that if the position which has been maintained by many very learned divines of very high character, with no mean show of argument—a position, too, which is in strict accordance with what is still the canon law in England, and was the temporal law from time immemorial till within these three months, namely, that to marry a divorced woman is 'forbidden by the word of God'—it follows, I say, that if this position be true, (and the onus of proving it to be untrue seems to rest with those who deny what the church's law has always hitherto received), the only certain way in which such a marriage can legally be contracted at all is by the parties contenting themselves with marrying before the registrar."

COMMON LAW RULE.

Appeals to Superior Courts of Common Law under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

REGULA GENERALIS.—Michaelmas Term, 1857.

1. It is ordered, that in cases of appeal to a superior Court under the provisions of the stat. 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, the 15th and 16th Practice Rules of Hilary Term, 1853, so far as the same are applicable, shall be observed.

2. And in cases when the appeal is to be heard before a judge at chambers, the appellant shall obtain an appointment for such hearing, and shall forthwith give notice thereof to the respondent, and shall, four clear days before the day appointed for the hearing, deliver at the judge's chambers a copy of the appeal.

The statute with reference to which the above rule is framed gives an appeal on points of law from the decision of justices upon any information or complaint made before them. The 15th and 16th Practice Rules of Hilary Term, 1853, are to the effect, that appeals may be set down for argument in the special paper, at the request of either party, four clear days before the day of argument, notice thereof being given forthwith to the opposite party, and the appeal cases, with points for argument, being delivered to the judges.

REGISTRATION OF TITLES TO LAND.

Communication from the Council of the Incorporated Law Society of the United Kingdom on the Subject of the Report from the Commission for considering the Subject of the Registration of Titles to Land.

AT the close of last session a Report from the Commission for considering the subject of the Registration of Titles to Land was laid on the tables of both Houses of Parliament. It contains various important recommendations, with the view to introduce an entire and uniform system of registration of titles throughout England and Wales, and it also contains various recommendations or suggestions for alterations in the law of real property, preparatory to the introduction of an uniform system of registration.

The Report was accompanied by the draft of a bill prepared by one of the commissioners, which, though in some respects differing from the recommendations made in the Report, agrees with them altogether in principle. The Report was also accompanied by an Appendix, containing the suggestions, opinions, and evidence of numerous members of various branches of the Profession on the subject of the inquiry.

As it is not unlikely that at an early date bills will be brought into Parliament to carry into effect the recommendations of the Report, and as the subject is one in which the whole body of solicitors are much interested and entitled to be heard, and at the same time one on which they can furnish useful information and opinions, the Council consider it desirable that the main features of the Report, and of the recommendations contained in it, should be before the whole Profession at an early stage of the matter, in order that they may have an opportunity of considering the subject fully, and of expressing their opinions on it before the new system shall be authoritatively introduced.

With this feeling the Council beg to draw the attention of the solicitors throughout the country to the contents of the Report, and the evidence and papers accompanying it, and to invite opinions and communications on the subject of it.

The following statement contains the principal recommendations contained in the Report, to which they ask particular and early attention.

In order to facilitate reference to the Report itself the Council have distinguished the extracts they have made, by numbers, referring to the several sections in the Report from which the extracts are made.

PRELIMINARY OBSERVATIONS.

XLVII. As to whether Registration should be voluntary or compulsory.

1. The commissioners do not recommend that all persons, owners or possessors of land, should be compelled to register within a limited period.
2. They do not recommend that persons should be compelled to prove title, or submit it to investigation before registration.
3. They do not recommend that dealings with land unregistered should have no effect.
4. They recommend that registration shall not (at least at first) be necessary to a transfer of the fee, in order to give it preference over a subsequent transfer brought to the registry for completion.
5. They recommend that as to land once put on the register, it should be compulsory that the subsequent dealings be always continued in the register.

XLVIII. As to Parliamentary Title.

The commissioners do not consider it necessary to registration that it should confer parliamentary title, but think that registration should be allowed in the first instance on ostensible or possessory ownership, leaving the antecedent title for investigation, until by lapse of time it should become unnecessary.

XLIX. As to pre-existing Interests.

The commissioners recommend that interests created before the commencement of registration should not be barred by mere registration, but should be allowed to be claimed notwithstanding the registration.

L. Protection of beneficial Interests compatible with Registration of Legal Ownership.

The commissioners think the system of registering legal ownership will not be thought objectionable by landowners, and that beneficial interests will be sufficiently protected.

LI. Whether Metropolitan or Provincial Register.

The commissioners recommend that the principal office be in London, but that local or district registries be established.

LEADING PARTICULARS OF THE PLAN RECOMMENDED BY THE COMMISSIONERS.

LII. Land Register or Transfer Office for England and Wales to be established in London, and branch offices in different districts, under the authority of the registrar-general.

LIII. Registration to extend to all corporeal hereditaments, except copyholds; and to advowsons and rent-charges, except tithe rent-charges.

LIV. All owners in fee may apply for the registration of the ownership, so that such ownership shall thenceforth be manifested by the register alone.

LV. Registration to be twofold—

1. Enabling registered owner to transfer estate, with immediate statutory title.
2. Registration of actual ownership, without power to transfer an immediate statutory title.

LVI. In case of registration not giving a statutory title, the party applying must produce—

1. A declaration of ownership, and where it can be done, the last instrument of conveyance; or,
2. A decree or judgment, and also such declaration.

LVII. Registration giving immediate statutory title to be allowed on investigation of title by the registrar, and on payment of a small premium or per-centage on estimated value of property. After that, the Consolidated Fund to be liable to make fair compensation to any party establishing a claim on the estate of which the title is thus warranted.

LVIII. A certificate of registry to be given to the party applying—

Either of warranted ownership, or unwarranted ownership.

LIX. The registered ownership will, for the purposes of transfer, represent the fee-simple, and will not be divisible into partial or limited estates or interests, except so far as charges and leases may be admitted to benefits of registration.

LX. Right of disposition in fee, and to charge and lease, to be incident to registered ownership.

LXI. Registered ownership not warranted will be subject to previously existing rights and interests, but not to any rights subsequent to the first registration; except charges and leases admitted to register, and interests protected by caveat.

LXII. Warranted registered ownership to be subject only to the registered rights.

LXIII. What rights registered ownership, whether warranted or not warranted, will be subject to. The register will be a substitute for the documentary or parchment title.

But the registered ownership will remain subject to rights not usually included in the abstracts—

1. Rights in a physical, not legal sense.
2. Those supposed to attach on all land.
3. Such rights as may be ascertained by inspection, or inquiry of occupier, such as rights of water, rights of way, rights of sporting, rights of light, profits à prendre, tithe rent-charges, land tax, other taxes and rates, short rack-rent leases with occupation.

LXIV. It is suggested that facility will be afforded by register of obtaining loans.

The possession of the certificate of registered ownership will confer the same advantages as possession of title deeds.

LXV. Consideration of mode of protecting unregistered interests, and statement of the commissioners' views thereon. Equitable interests not to be put on the register, (but protected by caveats; see No. 67).

LXVI. Two parties may register themselves as owners, with the words "No survivorship."

LXVII. Parties having unregistered interests may protect themselves by caveat—

Not to be put on without consent of registered owner;

Or order of Court of Chancery, as in case of distringases on stock.

Not to be removed but on certain events or certain consents.

LXVIII. Protection of unregistered interests by injunction.

LXIX. Registered owner, for purposes of a settlement, not to retain registered ownership after trusts are satisfied.

LXX. On the death of registered owner, his executor to be his representative of the registered ownership; and if no executor, another registered owner to be appointed by registrar or a judge, on application of the parties interested.

LXXI. The commissioners intend that the same powers of disposition and enjoyment, and means of protection and security, should be left to the owners of land as at present, and they consider that the plan recommended secures this object, except when a transfer is by absence of a caveat impliedly permitted.

LXXII. Registered transferees without valuable consideration to be subject to the claims of persons interested in unregistered ownership, in the same manner as their transferor would have been; but purchasers from them without fraud not to be affected.

LXXIII. Fraud in obtaining a transfer of the registered ownership shall defeat registered ownership acquired by fraud; but notice of unregistered rights shall not, as notice, have such effect.

LXXIV. The Report recommends—

1. That registrar may require description of property to be such as he deems best.
2. That registrar may require production of a private map, on such scale as he shall by regulation require.
3. That such map shall be referred to in the description to be put on the register.
4. That registrar may require a reference in the description of the property to a public map.
5. That registrar may declare any maps to be public maps for the purpose of registry.
6. That registrar may adapt the maps to the registration districts, or the districts to the maps.

LXXV. When the registered ownership is unfettered by caveat, the registered owner can require a transfer on production of certificate of registered ownership.

The purchaser also to produce a deed of grant.

The transfer to be made by deed in simple form authorised by the act.

Proper evidence to be adduced to registrar of validity of deed.

And the registrar, on completion, will deliver to transferee a fresh certificate of registered ownership. This will give the person so registered a title absolutely free from all interests created since the first registration, except easements, registered leases, and registered charges.

LXXVI. Incumbrances and charges are to be registered as follows:—

1. So as to shew name, land, amount secured, rate of interest, and date of instrument.
2. To be registered with consent, or the order of Court.
3. The land may be transferred, subject to the charge, or the charge may be transferred independent of the registered owner.
4. A certificate of the charge to be given by registrar to the party.
5. The priorities of charges to be determined according to the date of their respective registrations.
6. Unregistered charges to take effect as unregistered interests.

LXXVII. Leases for twenty-one years and upwards admitted to benefit of registration, subject to the following rules:—

1. The entry of the lease to shew the name of owner thereof, length of term, date, and rent.
2. Every such entry is to be with consent of registered owner, or order of competent court.
3. On registering the lease, the registered ownership will be subject thereto, and either may be transferred independent of the other.
4. A certificate of the lease will be given to the party registering it.

LXXVIII. Registered charges and registered leases are to be transferred in the same way as registered ownership, and on the death of registered owners, their representatives may be registered in their place.

LXXIX. The commissioners propose to vest in Court of Chancery powers for the purpose of allowing the conversion of land into money at once, with the concurrence only of the party in possession and enjoyment, and providing a place of deposit for the money for division among the parties entitled.

LXXX. The mode of indexing to be left chiefly to the determination of the registrar. There must be—1. An index of registered owners. 2. An index of incumbrancers. 3. An index of lessees.

LXXXI. Miscellaneous provisions:—

1. The title deeds not to be required to be delivered to the registrar.
2. Registrar to have the power of determining conflicting claims by consent, or of putting them in a course of judicial determination.
3. No tenancy in common to be allowed in a registered ownership.
4. Registrar to have power to make necessary regulations.
5. A difference of fees for large and small transactions.

LXXXII. The authority of the registrar, as a general principle, should be ministerial and executive, not judicial.

XC. Improvements in the present law of real property, and the forms of conveyancing, recommended to be made concurrently with the introduction of the system of registration of title.

XCI. Partial establishment of registrar recommended, confined at first to some particular county or district.

XCII. Remuneration of solicitors to be reconsidered in reference to their duties and responsibilities.

In many other matters the law has been materially altered, and doubtful points have been settled by recently-decided cases, all which are now to be found in the present edition.

REPORT of the DIRECTORS of the CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, presented at the Annual General Meeting, held at the Society's Office No. 13, St. James's-square, London, FRIDAY, the 27th November, 1857.

It will be in the recollection of the Proprietors that at two Extraordinary General Meetings, held on the 1st and 28th January last, the period for holding the Annual Meetings was altered from March to November, in order that earlier publicity might be given to the state of the Society's affairs at the end of June, that being the period fixed by the Deed for the termination of each financial year. In consequence of this alteration no Meeting took place in March last, and it is therefore now the duty of the Directors to lay before this Meeting a statement of the transactions of the Society for the two years ending the 30th June, 1857.

The number of New Policies issued within that period was 1097;

The amount of Assurances granted was 605,300*l*.; and

The New Premiums arising therefrom amount to 20,729*l*. per annum.

The Assurance Fund, notwithstanding the payment in cash of 65,384*l*. as Bonus since the declaration in January, has increased during the two years by no less a sum than 55,676*l*.

From these facts it will be readily perceived that during the period under notice the progress of the Society has been in no degree retarded by the effects of the war, by the state of the money market, or by the active competition which has existed amongst kindred institutions.

After the full and comprehensive statements made at the Extraordinary Meeting in January last, when the SIXTH BONUS was declared, the Directors feel that there is little further now to communicate; but they cannot refrain from mentioning that the Bonus then divided, which averaged 46*l*. per cent. in Reversion, and 27*l*. per cent. in cash, on the Premiums received since 1851, has given general satisfaction, and has tended materially to sustain and advance the high estimation in which the Society has been so long held by the Public.

An Account of the Proceedings at the last BONUS MEETING, setting forth the Assets and Liabilities of the Society, and also the FAVOURABLE POSITION IN WHICH PERSONS WHO NOW ASSURE will be placed, can be obtained on application.

GEORGE H. PINCKARD, Actuary.
GEORGE CUTCLIFFE, Assistant Actuary.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, DECEMBER 12, 1857.

As long ago as the year 1853 we took occasion to warn the public from being misled by the positive assertions made by a certain society, in the newspapers of the day, that a marriage between an Englishman and his deceased wife's sister would be valid if celebrated in a foreign country where such a marriage was legal. (See 17 Jur., part 2, p. 369). We then said that the doctrine of Lord Stowell on the subject, and of every other judge who had sat since his time, was this, that although the law of England requires itself certain forms and ceremonials for the contraction of a valid marriage in England, yet, upon general principles of convenience, it will treat as lawful in England a marriage contracted abroad without those ceremonials, if the marriage has been contracted in the form recognised by the law of the foreign state; but that neither Lord Stowell nor any other judge ever decided or said that where the law of England imposes a personal incapacity for marriage on particular persons, or, in other words, makes a marriage in England impossible with any ceremonial, it will recognise as valid a marriage contracted between such persons in a country whose laws permit it; and we expressed our opinion that no English Court would arrive at such a decision.

We have now the satisfaction of finding that our own views upon this important question are fully borne out and sanctioned by the opinion of so eminent a judge as Cresswell, J. In the case of Brook v. Brook, heard before Sir J. Stuart, V. C., assisted by Cresswell, J., the facts were, that William Leigh Brook, while domiciled in this country, married his deceased wife's sister (also domiciled in this country) at Altona, in the duchy of Schleswig-Holstein, where such a marriage is recognised by law. There were children by both marriages, and he left his property among them. The point was, whether the second marriage would be held valid in this country, and the issue of it be legitimate. Cresswell, J., decided both these questions in the negative. The Vice-Chancellor, however, reserved his decision, and at the time when we are writing has not delivered it. The learned judge who expressed his opinion on the subject first considered whether this marriage would have been voidable in the Ecclesiastical Court before the passing of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 54, because, if so, it would be void after that enactment. Had it been celebrated in England it was clearly voidable before that statute, as having been celebrated between persons "within the Levitical degrees, and prohibited from marrying by the Holy Scriptures, as interpreted by the canon law and by the stat. 25 Hen. 8." (Per Parke, B., in Sherwood v. Ray, 1 Moo. P. C. 395; see also Reg. v. Chadwick, 11 Q. B. 205). And in answer to the contention, that by the law of nations the question of its validity was to be decided according to the law of the country where the marriage took place, his Lordship said that no decision could be found in which such respect had been paid in this country to the law of a foreign country recognising a marriage contrary to what we deem to be God's law. In the absence of such direct authority, writers on international law were resorted to, and among these, of course, Story's Conflict of Laws was mainly relied upon.

After stating the general principle to be, that if a marriage is valid where it is celebrated it is valid everywhere, and that among the most prominent exceptions to this rule are marriages involving polygamy and incest, that learned writer proceeds to confine this doctrine against the recognition of incestuous marriages to such cases as by the general consent of all Christendom are deemed incestuous. (Sects. 113, 113 a, 114). From this last position Cresswell, J., dissents. "How is a judge," he asked, "sitting in an English court of justice, called upon to decide whether a marriage be incestuous or not, to be guided in his decision? Surely, if the law of his own country has already settled what is incestuous or the contrary, by that he must be governed. Is he to inquire into the opinions of all other nations in which Christianity exists, and to adopt that rule which is ascertained to prevail among the greater number, and to say that it shall be acted upon in defiance of the law of his own country? This would, indeed, be enlarging the comitas gentium to an extent hitherto unheard of."

The general expressions attributed to writers respecting the legal ubiquity of obligation which attaches to marriages celebrated according to the lex loci contractûs are, in the learned judge's opinion, to be restrained by an implied proviso that such marriages are not contrary to the laws of this country, and apply only to the forms and solemnities of constituting a marriage, and to the proof of the parties having made a contract. With regard to the question whether the 2nd section of stat. 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 54, is so framed as to be binding on all English subjects, wherever they may be, his Lordship considered that The Sussex Peerage case gave a decisive and satisfactory answer. The words of that section are, that "all marriages which shall hereafter be celebrated between persons within the prohibited degrees of consanguinity or affinity shall be absolutely null and void to all intents and purposes whatsoever." The words of the section (12 Geo. 3, c. 11, s. 1) involved in The Sussex Peerage case are, that no descendant of George II shall be capable of contracting matrimony without the consent of his Majesty, and that "every marriage of such descendant without such consent shall be null and void." Tindal, C. J., in expressing the opinions of the judges upon the question referred to them, said of this enactment, "The words of the statute itself appear to us to be free from ambiguity. The prohibitory words of it are general. . . . The statute does not enact an incapacity to contract matrimony within one particular country and district or another, but to contract matrimony generally and in the abstract. It is an incapacity attaching itself to the person of A. B., which he carries with him wherever he goes. . . . . The words employed are general, or, more properly, universal, and cannot be satisfied in their plain, literal, and ordinary meaning, unless they are held to extend to all marriages, in whatever part of the world they may have been contracted or celebrated."

"The whole of this passage," said Cresswell, J., "might have been written with reference to the statute of William IV, which does not enact an incapacity to contract matrimony within the prohibited degrees within one particular country and district or another, but to contract such marriage generally." "The object of the statute," he added, "was to put an end to all such marriages between English subjects for the future, and could not be satisfied by any narrower construction."

We lately inserted a letter from a correspondent in which the writer points out what he considers a defect in the working of the Court for the Consideration of Crown Cases Reserved. We entirely agree with the remarks of our correspondent upon the important question to which he has called our attention. The complaint is, that all the cases which come before that Court for decision, and which when decided are binding upon all Courts, are not argued by counsel on both sides. Formerly it was the practice, when any objection was taken by a prisoner, on a trial before any court of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery, either to the indictment or the evidence, for the presiding judge, if he considered the objection worthy of it, to state a case for the consideration of all the judges, and if the judges, or a majority of them, thought the objection well founded, the prisoner was recommended to the Crown for a pardon. Upon a case so reserved the judges did not sit strictly as a court, but rather as assessors to the judge who had tried the case, and the judgment ultimately announced was considered as his judgment. The reasons of the judgment were never publicly given. The judges heard counsel for the prisoner, if he thought fit to employ one, and in that case they also heard counsel for the Crown. This continued to be the practice down to the passing of the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 78, (1848), which recites, that "it is expedient to provide a better mode than that now in use of deciding any difficult question of law which may arise in criminal trials," &c. By that statute the power of reserving cases was extended to courts of quarter sessions, and the present Court for the Consideration of Crown Cases Reserved was established. By the 3rd section the judgments of the Court are to be delivered in open court, "after hearing counsel or the parties, in case the prosecutor or the person convicted shall think it fit that the case shall be argued." From this it would seem that it was intended that these cases should be argued on both sides—at all events, where the prosecutor or the prisoner thought it desirable. The section seems to leave it discretionary with the prosecutor, viz. the Crown, or the person convicted, to have the case argued at all; but either party having elected to be heard, then, as it appears to us, there was to be no one-sided argument, but the whole matter was to be discussed pro and con. The words are, "after hearing counsel or the parties." This view of the construction of the section in question we think confirmed by the following Rule of Court, (1850), "that when any case is intended to be argued by counsel or by the parties, notice thereof be given to the clerk of the court at least two days previously to the sitting of the Court"—a rule which seems to have reference to the above section, and to be in furtherance of its object. But however this may be, the practice has always been, as stated by our correspondent, to decide cases sometimes without hearing any argument at all, no one appearing on either side, and still more frequently when the question has been argued only on one side. We do not impugn the decisions of the learned judges who from time to time have constituted this tribunal, but put our objections to the existing practice upon the fact that they have not that assistance in "deciding any difficult question of law" which they have a right to expect, and the utility of which has been so frequently acknowledged in Westminster Hall, viz. the full argument of a case by counsel. If it is urged in favour of the present practice that a departure from it would entail additional expense upon the country, we answer that the decisions of the questions which come before this Court are of great public importance, not merely affecting the liberty of individuals, but having the effect of establishing certainty in the administration of the criminal law, inasmuch as they are declaratory of what that law really is. That those decisions, therefore, should be arrived at only after ample discussion, and with the greatest possible care, is surely an advantage for which the public might be well content to pay. Besides, the extra costs that would be incurred must be comparatively small, for it should be remembered that in cases where counsel are now instructed for the prosecution the costs are always allowed upon their being certified by the clerk of the court to the proper officer of the court below. It is, therefore, as regards the expense, simply a question between counsel being instructed in all cases, or only, as now, in some.

The suggestion of our correspondent as to the mode by which the desired change in the practice might be effected seems a practicable one, and we apprehend that a Rule of Court would only be necessary for carrying it out. The existing system has prevailed since the establishment of the Court, a period of upwards of nine years, and it may, therefore, seem somewhat late in the day to attack it; but we know that amongst the Profession practising at the criminal bar there has long been a feeling against it, and we have made these remarks in the hope, that as "it's never too late to mend," attention may be drawn to the subject in the proper quarter, and that we shall soon see some efficient step taken in the matter.

THE NEW COURT OF PROBATE, AND FOR DIVORCE AND MATRIMONIAL CAUSES.

Orders by her Majesty in Council have been issued appointing the first day of Hilary Term next as the period for the coming into operation of the new Probate Act, and the Divorce and Matrimonial Causes Act. The Orders are as follow:—

"Whereas by an act passed in the last session of Parliament, intituled 'An Act to amend the Law relating to Probates and Letters of Administration in England,' it is enacted that the said act (except where otherwise specially provided) shall come into operation on such day, not sooner than the 1st January, 1858, as her Majesty shall by Order in Council appoint, provided that such Order shall be made one month at least previously to the day so to be appointed; and whereas it is by the said act further enacted, that the Court of Probate appointed under the provisions of the said act is to hold its ordinary sittings and to have its principal registry at such place or places in London or Middlesex as her Majesty in Council shall from time to time appoint:

"Now, therefore, her Majesty, in pursuance of the said act, and by and with the advice of her Privy Council, is pleased to order and appoint, and it is hereby ordered and appointed, that the said recited act (except where otherwise specially provided) shall come into operation on the 11th January next; and her Majesty, by and with the like advice, is further pleased to order and appoint, and it is hereby ordered and appointed, that the above-mentioned Court of Probate shall hold its ordinary sittings in any of the courts in Westminster Hall which can be conveniently used for the purpose, and shall have its principal registry in the city of London, in the building now used as the public registry of the Prerogative Court of the Archbishop of Canterbury."

"Whereas by an act passed in the last session of Parliament, intituled 'An Act to amend the Law relating to Divorce and Matrimonial Causes in England,' it is enacted that the said act shall come into operation on such day, not sooner than the 1st January, 1858, as her Majesty shall by Order in Council appoint, provided that such Order be made one month at least previously to the day so to be appointed; and whereas it is by the said act further enacted, that the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, appointed under the provisions of the said act, shall hold its sittings at such place or places in London or Middlesex, or elsewhere, as her Majesty in Council shall from time to time appoint:

"Now, therefore, her Majesty, in pursuance of the said act, and by and with the advice of her Privy Council, is pleased to order and appoint, and it is hereby ordered and appointed, that the said recited act shall come into operation on the 11th January next; and her Majesty, by and with the like advice, is further pleased to order and appoint, and it is hereby ordered and appointed, that the above-mentioned Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes shall hold its sittings in any of the courts in Westminster Hall which can be conveniently used for the purpose."

PUBLIC EXAMINATION OF STUDENTS.

Hilary Term, 1858.

The Council of Legal Education have approved of the following rules for the public examination of the students.

The attention of the students is requested to the following rules of the Inns of Court:—

"As an inducement to students to propose themselves for examination, studentships shall be founded of fifty guineas per annum each, to continue for a period of three years, and one such studentship shall be conferred on the most distinguished student at each public examination; and further, the examiners shall select and certify the names of three other students who shall have passed the next best examinations, and the Inns of Court to which such students belong may, if desired, dispense with any terms, not exceeding two, that may remain to be kept by such students previously to their being called to the Bar. Provided that the examiners shall not be obliged to confer or grant any studentship or certificate unless they shall be of opinion that the examination of the students they select has been such as entitles them thereto."

"At every call to the Bar those students who have passed a public examination, and either obtained a studentship or a certificate of honour, shall take rank in seniority over all other students who shall be called on the same day."

"No students shall be eligible to be called to the Bar who shall not either have attended during one whole year the lectures of two of the Readers, or have satisfactorily passed a public examination."

Rules for the Public Examination of Candidates for Honours, or Certificates entitling Students to be called to the Bar.

An examination will be held in next Hilary Term, to which a student of any of the Inns of Court, who is desirous of becoming a candidate for a studentship or honours, or of obtaining a certificate of fitness for being called to the Bar, will be admissible.

Each student proposing to submit himself for examination will be required to enter his name at the treasurer's office of the Inn of Court to which he belongs on or before Thursday, the 31st day of December instant; and he will further be required to state in writing whether his object in offering himself for examination is to compete for a studentship or other honourable distinction, or whether he is merely desirous of obtaining a certificate preliminary to a call to the Bar.

The examination will commence on Thursday, the 7th day of January next, and will be continued on the Friday and Saturday following.

It will take place in the Benchers' Reading-room of Lincoln's-inn; and the doors will be closed ten minutes after the time appointed for the commencement of the examination.

The examination by printed questions will be conducted in the following order:—

Thursday morning, the 7th January, at half-past nine, on Constitutional Law and Legal History; in the afternoon, at half-past one, on Equity.

Friday morning, the 8th January, at half-past nine, on Common Law; in the afternoon, at half-past one, on the Law of Real Property, &c.

Saturday morning, the 9th January, at half-past nine, on Jurisprudence and the Civil Law; in the afternoon, at half-past one, a paper will be given to the students including questions bearing upon all the foregoing subjects of examination.

The oral examination will be conducted in the same order, during the same hours, and on the same subjects, as those already marked out for the examination by printed questions, except that on Saturday afternoon there will be no oral examination.

The oral examination of each student will be conducted apart from the other students; and the character of that examination will vary, according as the student is a candidate for honours or a studentship, or desires simply to obtain a certificate.

The oral examination and printed questions will be founded on the books below mentioned, regard being had, however, to the particular object with a view to which the student presents himself for examination.

In determining the question, whether a student has passed the examination in such a manner as to entitle him to be called to the Bar, the examiners will principally have regard to the general knowledge of law and jurisprudence which he has displayed.

A student may present himself at any number of examinations, until he shall have obtained a certificate.

Any student who shall obtain a certificate may present himself a second time for examination as a candidate for the studentship, but only at one of the three examinations immediately succeeding that at which he shall have obtained such certificate; provided, that if any student so presenting himself shall not succeed in obtaining the studentship, his name shall not appear in the list.

Students who have kept more than eleven terms shall not be admitted to an examination for the studentship.

REPORT of the DIRECTORS of the CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, presented at the Annual General Meeting, held at the Society's Office, No. 13, St. James's-square, London, FRIDAY, the 27th November, 1857.

It will be in the recollection of the Proprietors that at two Extraordinary General Meetings, held on the 1st and 28th January last, the period for holding the Annual Meetings was altered from March to November, in order that earlier publicity might be given to the state of the Society's affairs at the end of June, that being the period fixed by the Deed for the termination of each financial year. In consequence of this alteration no Meeting took place in March last, and it is therefore now the duty of the Directors to lay before this Meeting a statement of the transactions of the Society for the two years ending the 30th June, 1857.

The number of New Policies issued within that period was 1097;
The amount of Assurances granted was 605,300*l*.; and
The New Premiums arising therefrom amount to 20,729*l*. per annum.
The Assurance Fund, notwithstanding the payment in cash of 65,384*l*. as Bonus since the declaration in January, has increased during the two years by no less a sum than 55,676*l*.

From these facts it will be readily perceived that during the period under notice the progress of the Society has been in no degree retarded by the effects of the war, by the state of the money market, or by the active competition which has existed amongst kindred institutions.

After the full and comprehensive statements made at the Extraordinary Meeting in January last, when the SIXTH BONUS was declared, the Directors feel that there is little further now to communicate; but they cannot refrain from mentioning that the Bonus then divided, which averaged 46*l*. per cent. in Reversion, and 27*l*. per cent. in cash, on the Premiums received since 1851, has given general satisfaction, and has tended materially to sustain and advance the high estimation in which the Society has been so long held by the Public.

An Account of the Proceedings at the last BONUS MEETING, setting forth the Assets and Liabilities of the Society, and also the FAVOURABLE POSITION IN WHICH PERSONS WHO NOW ASSURE will be placed, can be obtained on application.

GEORGE CUTCLIFFE, Assistant Actuary.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, DECEMBER 19, 1857.

THERE are few rules established by the decisions of our Courts which are calculated to strike a student of law with more surprise than the well-known one, that a voluntary settlement of real estate is liable to be defeated by a subsequent sale for value by the settlor. This surprise is hardly abated when he learns that the rule rests upon an enactment, (27 Eliz. c. 4, s. 2), "that all and every conveyance, grant, charge, lease, estate, incumbrance, and limitation of use or uses of, in, or out of any lands, tenements, or other hereditaments whatsoever, had or made any time heretofore sithence the beginning of the Queen's Majesty's reign that now is, or at any time hereafter to be had or made, for the intent and of purpose to defraud and deceive such person or persons, bodies politic or corporate, as have purchased, or shall afterwards purchase, in fee-simple, fee-tail, for life, lives, or years, the same lands, tenements, and hereditaments, or any part or parcel thereof, so formerly conveyed, granted, leased, charged, incumbered, or limited in use, or to defraud and deceive such as have or shall purchase any rent, profit, or commodity in or out of the same, or any part thereof, shall be deemed and taken, only as against that person and persons, &c. which have purchased, or shall hereafter purchase, for money or other good consideration, the same lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any part or parcel thereof, or any rent, profit, or commodity in or out of the same, to be utterly void, frustrate, and of none effect." It will naturally be asked, "Does the law say that a conveyance is fraudulent merely because it is made without valuable consideration? Is it not an encouragement to fraud to say, that if a man makes a voluntary settlement of land, he may afterwards sell the land, so as to give a good title to a purchaser, though quite aware of the settlement; thus gaining an opportunity of receiving the value of the land, and absconding with the proceeds?"

Yet the rule has its foundation in reason, though we think it has been carried too far. "The principle on which voluntary conveyances have been held uniformly to be fraudulent and void as against subsequent purchasers," says Lord Campbell, C. J., in Doe v. Rusham, (16 Jur., part 1, p. 359), "appears to be, that by selling the property for a valuable consideration, the seller so entirely repudiates the former voluntary conveyance, and shews his intention to sell, as that it shall be taken conclusively against him, and the person to whom he conveyed, that such intention existed when he made the conveyance, and that it was made in order to defeat the purchaser." The reasoning is, perhaps, somewhat technical, but we think that little exception can be taken to it, and that the rule might well have been treated as founded on good grounds had it been confined to cases in which the purchaser is ignorant of the prior voluntary conveyance.

If voluntary conveyances were to be held good as against purchasers, without notice of them, a wide door would be opened for fraud, as it is generally easy for a man who has made a voluntary settlement to suppress it, and hold himself out to the world as absolute owner. A purchaser would in such a case be defrauded by means of the conveyance; and as a remedial statute is to be construed largely, we think that there is no objection to holding, as against a settlor who thus commits a fraud, and the volunteers claiming under him, that the fraud is to be treated as existing at the time of the execution of the settlement which is afterwards made the instrument of the fraud. It is difficult, however, to see how the rule came to be extended to the case of a purchaser who had notice of the settlement; for it can hardly be said that he is defrauded, any more than a purchaser who buys subject to a beneficial lease, of which he has full notice. The principle certainly seems to us to have been carried beyond the legitimate bounds of its application.

It seems questionable whether the case of Barton v. Vanheythuysen (11 Hare, 126) does not carry the rule to a still more dangerous extent. It was there held, that a conveyance for value of "all and singular the real estate" of the grantor was sufficient to defeat a prior voluntary settlement. The circumstances of the case were rather peculiar, involving no small amount of actual fraud, and the decision may, to a great extent, have turned upon them; but it has been cited in practice as establishing, and it may fairly be contended that it does lay down, a general rule to the above effect. We propose briefly to consider whether such a rule can be considered to be law.

It is true, that the statute, as being a remedial act, has been construed largely; still we must not forget that it is a settled rule of law, as well as of Christian ethics, that fraud is not lightly to be presumed. Now, in all the cases to which the statute indisputably does apply, there exists either fraud or something much allied to it. A man has no moral right to settle an estate, and then sell it in fee, in derogation of his own grant. Though the statute gives effect to the sale, still the proceeding is regarded as wrong, and the vendor cannot compel specific performance against the purchaser. Where a settlor sells to a purchaser without notice, the case in our opinion comes properly, as we have already observed, within the statute—a fraud on the purchaser is attempted. Where the vendor sells to a purchaser with notice he is doing a wrong; and though, as we have said, we do not see that he is committing a fraud on the purchaser, still he is guilty of such conduct, that the Courts, though they may have erred in referring the fraud to the first transaction, have not imputed fraud to the vendor without any ground having been laid for their so doing. But where a man, having settled part of his real property, makes a conveyance for value of "all my estate," from what, in the absence of special circumstances, is fraud to be presumed? What do the words "all his estate" mean? It can, we think, hardly be contended, that they ought to receive a more extended signification than "all lands, tenements, &c. of or to which he is seised, possessed, or entitled for any estate or interest whatsoever, at law or in equity, whether in possession, reversion, remainder, or expectancy, or over which he has any disposing power which he can without the assent of any other person exercise for his own benefit." These are (apart from some slight variations used to make them suitable to the case of a conveyance) the words used in stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 13; and in the case of Beavan v. Lord Oxford (6 De G., Mac., & G. 507) it was decided that the words of that statute did not apply to land of which a voluntary settlement had been made; and that a judgment, which according to the act was to be a charge on the property so described, was inoperative as against such voluntary settlement. We think that case thoroughly consistent with reason. When a man has conveyed away an estate, though without consideration, it is no longer his; and the fact that he can defeat that conveyance by a subsequent conveyance for value does not make the estate any more his. The statute was passed for the purchaser's benefit, not for the vendor's, and operates so far only as is necessary to secure the purchaser. If the grantor, after the voluntary grant, mortgages the estate, not he, but the voluntary grantee, is entitled to the equity of redemption; and though the statute enables the grantor to defeat his grant, it does not enable him to make the estate his own. We think, therefore, that the words "all his estate" are, both on principle and authority, inapplicable to the settled estate, and cannot, without more, shew any intention to deal with it; and if so, the conveying party must, we submit, be considered as clear of fraud, and as intending to deal only with what is properly his, and which he can deal with without a breach of any obligation.

The Vice-Chancellor says, (11 Hare, 130), with reference to the argument that the settled estate was not intended to be dealt with, "The fallacy in this argument consists in assuming that the first objection has been sustained, and in regarding the H. estate as not in truth the property of V.," (the settlor), "which, as between himself and a subsequent purchaser, I have held it to have been." We cannot, notwithstanding the high respect we feel for the Vice-Chancellor's opinion, regard this answer as satisfactory, unless it turned on something special in the circumstances of the case, which appear to be meagrely reported. By virtue of the statute of Elizabeth, the settlor may in some sense be considered the owner of the settled estate, as regards a purchaser of that estate from him; but the question is, whether the purchaser ever became a purchaser of that estate; and this brings us back to the question, whether the expression "his estate" can be taken to refer to an estate of which the grantor had previously made a voluntary settlement. It may also be considered to detract from the weight due to the Vice-Chancellor's judgment, that he appears to have been much influenced by two cases, which, after the observations made upon them in the more recent case of Beavan v. Lord Oxford, (6 De G., Mac., & G. 519), and the decision in that case, can hardly be treated as law.

THE question of how far, and when, notice to a sheriff's officer is notice to the sheriff, is one which frequently recurs in practice, and yet has not been treated, indeed is scarcely to be found touched upon, either in the books of evidence or of practice. It may possibly, therefore, be of service to some of our readers if we devote a few lines to bringing together the leading points of the subject. Generally it is the known rule, on the one hand, that notice to the principal is notice to all his agents, if there be time to communicate that notice to the agents before the event which raises the question has happened; (Mayhew v. Eames, 3 B. & Cr. 631, recognised in Willis v. The Bank of England, 4 Ad. & El. 21); and on the other hand, that notice to the agent is notice to the principal, (per Ashhurst, J., 1 T. R. 16), provided that the notice be given in the same transaction in which the agent is at the time concerned for his employer. But on this proviso there has been ingrafted a material qualification, for it has been laid down, that although, in general, the notice, to bind the principal, must be one given in the course of the identical transaction, yet that if it have been given in a transaction previous to, but still so near to, the one in question as to raise the presumption that the agent remembers the notice, that is sufficient. (Majoribanks v. Hovenden, Dru. Ir. Rep. 18, per Sugden, C.; Hargreaves v. Rothwell, 1 Kee. 154). But notice to the agent before the agency has begun, or after it has terminated, will not ordinarily affect the principal. (Hiern v. Mill, 13 Ves. 120). Also, constructive notice to the agent operates to bind the principal equally with direct or positive notice to the former. (Toulmin v. Steere, 3 Mer. 210). Having premised these general grounds, let us see how the principles contained in them have been applied to cases of sheriffs' officers. One of the cases which is of most frequent occurrence with reference to this matter is that of seizing under a fi. fa., without leaving sufficient to pay the year's rent then due. How do you prove the knowledge of the sheriff of this fact on the trial of an action against him for the irregular seizure? The answer is, it is sufficient to shew that the person who takes the goods away was told so; and that is so without its being shewn or orally admitted that such person was employed by the sheriff—that is, without the warrant being produced, or any declaration of the person seizing being proved, to establish the connexion of officer and sheriff between him and the defendant. This was held on a plea traversing the allegation of notice to the defendant in the declaration. (Reed v. Thoytt, 6 M. & W. 410). It must be observed, however, that there was this further proof of the connexion, that it was admitted on the record that the defendant, as sheriff, seized the goods in question, it not appearing that there was depending any other execution than the one deposed to. Again: in an action at the suit of an execution creditor against a sheriff for seizing the debtor's goods under the fi. fa., but falsely returning nulla bona, where the case for the plaintiff was, that at the time of the delivery of the writ to the sheriff the execution debtor was possessed of property far exceeding in value the amount indorsed on the plaintiff's writ; and the defendant contended that at the delivery of that writ there was already in his hands a writ for a larger sum at the suit of one Bebb, which rendered it impossible for him to seize as by virtue of the plaintiff's writ; and some evidence was given of circumstances tending to shew that the party seizing (who, it was not disputed, was the officer of the sheriff) had notice that Bebb's writ was founded on a fraudulent judgment; and evidence was also received to impeach this judgment itself for the fraud—this evidence, it was argued, was inadmissible without first establishing the fact of the sheriff's notice of the fraud. The Court held, however, that there was evidence of at least sufficient notice to put the sheriff on inquiry whether such fraud as alleged had been committed; for "notice to a sheriff's officer to whom the execution of the plaintiff's writ was committed, after the delivery of the writ to him, was notice to the sheriff himself." (Imray v. Magnay, 11 M. & W. 273. See, however, some doubts thrown on this decision, Remmett v. Lawrence, 14 Jur., part 1, p. 1067). So in the following case:—A writ of ca. sa. was lodged with A., a sheriff's officer, with instructions from the plaintiff's attornies to procure a warrant and execute it; but some days after the plaintiff's attornies sent A. a written notice not to execute, and that they withdrew the writ, which nevertheless did not appear to have been taken from the sheriff's office. Afterwards, the defendant not having performed an undertaking on which the writ was agreed to be withdrawn, the plaintiff lodged a writ of habeas corpus ad satisfaciendum with the keeper of the Queen's Prison, (where the defendant was in custody on another writ at the suit of a different plaintiff), and the defendant was accordingly brought up and charged in execution on this writ; but on a motion to set aside this writ of habeas corpus, and discharge the defendant as to the plaintiff's execution, it was held that the above-mentioned notice to the officer was notice to the sheriff. (Howard v. Cauty, 8 Jur., part 1, p. 984). In a later case, which did not very materially differ from Imray v. Magnay in its circumstances, the Court of Exchequer confirmed that case, and held, the plaintiff having given notice to the sheriff's officer that a judgment, and execution thereon, levied previously to his, were fraudulent, that there was sufficient notice of the fraud to oblige the sheriff to inquire into the question of fraud at his peril. (Christopherson v. Burton, 3 Exch. 162). It may perhaps, therefore, be laid down as the rule, subject to the application of the principles first set out, that notice to the sheriff's officer is notice to the sheriff. On the other hand, (probably with the same restrictions), notice to the sheriff is notice to the officer. (Belshaw v. Marshall, 4 B. & Ad. 339).

THE PUBLIC RECORD OFFICE.—The Treasury solicitor's papers are now passing through the hands of Mr. Hart, who is engaged in forming a catalogue. They comprise all the law business of the Crown from about 1715 to nearly the present day—prosecutions of every kind, including a curious and interesting series of indictments for libel, sedition, and blasphemous books and speeches, examples from which we should be glad to give our readers, but that these documents are not open to public inspection. These papers are viewed in the same light as the papers of an attorney. But we venture to suggest that the Master of the Rolls might direct a selection to be made of such papers as could be opened without detriment. For instance, we would name the rebellion papers of 1745.—Athenæum, No. 1568, p. 1425.

CHITTY'S COLLECTION of STATUTES of PRACTICAL UTILITY. With Notes thereon. Intended as a Circuit and Court Companion. The Second Edition. Containing all the Statutes of Practical Utility in the Civil and Criminal Administration of Justice to the Present Time. By W. N. WELSBY and EDWARD BEAVAN, Esqrs., Barristers at Law.

 In the debate on the proposed consolidation of the Statutes, on the 9th February, 1854, Lord Campbell said, "that the Statutes at Large extended to about fifty volumes folio, but all the Statutes which were usually required by lawyers for reference might be found in three octavo volumes compiled by his learned friend Mr. Welsby. When he (Lord Campbell) was upon the bench he always had this work by him, and no Statutes were ever referred to by the Bar which he could not find in it."

This important Work will be continued annually, by an Edition of the Statutes, arranged on a similar plan, with a full Index, being published shortly after the close of each Session. Edited by E. BEAVAN, Esq. Three Supplements are now ready, containing the Statutes of 1854, price 9s. 6d.; 1855, price 9s. 6d.; and 1856, price 6s., sewed.

REPORT of the DIRECTORS of the CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, presented at the Annual General Meeting, held at the Society's Office, No. 13, St. James's-square, London, FRIDAY, the 27th November, 1857.

It will be in the recollection of the Proprietors that at two Extraordinary General Meetings, held on the 1st and 28th January last, the period for holding the Annual Meetings was altered from March to November, in order that earlier publicity might be given to the state of the Society's affairs at the end of June, that being the period fixed by the Deed for the termination of each financial year. In consequence of this alteration no Meeting took place in March last, and it is therefore now the duty of the Directors to lay before this Meeting a statement of the transactions of the Society for the two years ending the 30th June, 1857.

The number of New Policies issued within that period was 1097;

The amount of Assurances granted was 605,800l.; and

The New Premiums arising therefrom amount to 20,729l. per annum.

The Assurance Fund, notwithstanding the payment in cash of 65,384l. as Bonus since the declaration in January, has increased during the two years by no less a sum than 55,676l.

From these facts it will be readily perceived that during the period under notice the progress of the Society has been in no degree retarded by the effects of the war, by the state of the money market, or by the active competition which has existed amongst kindred institutions.

After the full and comprehensive statements made at the Extraordinary Meeting in January last, when the SIXTH BONUS was declared, the Directors feel that there is little further now to communicate; but they cannot refrain from mentioning that the Bonus then divided, which averaged 46l. per cent. in Reversion, and 27l. per cent. in cash, on the Premiums received since 1851, has given general satisfaction, and has tended materially to sustain and advance the high estimation in which the Society has been so long held by the Public.

An Account of the Proceedings at the last BONUS MEETING, setting forth the Assets and Liabilities of the Society, and also the FAVOURABLE POSITION IN WHICH PERSONS WHO NOW ASSURE will be placed, can be obtained on application.

GEORGE CUTCLIFFE, Assistant Actuary.

REPORT of the DIRECTORS of the CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, presented at the Annual General Meeting, held at the Society's Office, No. 13, St. James's-square, London, FRIDAY, the 27th November, 1857.

It will be in the recollection of the Proprietors that at two Extraordinary General Meetings, held on the 1st and 28th January last, the period for holding the Annual Meetings was altered from March to November, in order that earlier publicity might be given to the state of the Society's affairs at the end of June, that being the period fixed by the Deed for the termination of each financial year. In consequence of this alteration no Meeting took place in March last, and it is therefore now the duty of the Directors to lay before this Meeting a statement of the transactions of the Society for the two years ending the 30th June, 1857.

The number of New Policies issued within that period was 1097;

The amount of Assurances granted was 605,300*l.*; and

The New Premiums arising therefrom amount to 20,729*l.* per annum.

The Assurance Fund, notwithstanding the payment in cash of 65,384*l.* as Bonus since the declaration in January, has increased during the two years by no less a sum than 55,676*l.*

From these facts it will be readily perceived that during the period under notice the progress of the Society has been in no degree retarded by the effects of the war, by the state of the money market, or by the active competition which has existed amongst kindred institutions.

After the full and comprehensive statements made at the Extraordinary Meeting in January last, when the SIXTH BONUS was declared, the Directors feel that there is little further now to communicate; but they cannot refrain from mentioning that the Bonus then divided, which averaged 46*l.* per cent. in Reversion, and 27*l.* per cent. in cash, on the Premiums received since 1851, has given general satisfaction, and has tended materially to sustain and advance the high estimation in which the Society has been so long held by the Public.

An Account of the Proceedings at the last BONUS MEETING, setting forth the Assets and Liabilities of the Society, and also the FAVOURABLE POSITION IN WHICH PERSONS WHO NOW ASSURE will be placed, can be obtained on application.

LONDON, DECEMBER 26, 1857.

Whatever may be thought of the general effects due to the late alterations in the law of procedure and practice, some of the indirect and remoter effects, it may already be discerned, are not altogether such as might be wished. Probably such must always be the result of making changes, however imperative the necessity for them may have become, in a vast edifice of jurisprudence the growth of centuries; the advantage largely preponderates, but still disadvantages are not imperceptible—the good is not unchequered with evil. So it was, most remarkably, in the case of the alterations of twenty-five years ago, which established the new Pleading Rules. How they were hailed as embodiments of sagacity, acuteness, and skill, guided at once by a wary fear of cutting away vital parts, and by a bold determination to lighten the burthens upon suitors, and prevent delays, at almost all hazards: scarce a voice being heard in opposition to the fashion of the day; or if a stray whisper of dissatisfaction found expression, it was only to be scouted at once as the dotage of some withered elder, whose intellectual machinery was thrown out of gear by the change. But as time brought with it experience, opinions began to modify—failures, shortcomings, positive evils, to be attributed to the once boasted New Rules, until at length, what none had foreseen, all became more or less convinced of, that further alterations, cutting deeper, sweeping wider, were imperatively required, and must be adopted. Those have been made, and made, few will deny, by strokes denoting a more masculine hand and steadier aim than guided the reforms of 1832. Will the existing code, by the end of the next quarter of a century, have fallen as far to the leeward of men's respect and favour as that which was launched in 1832, with so much applause, has since done? Or may we look for permanence in the new institutions? Now, assuredly few things connected with legislation are more devoutly to be wished than permanence for the late arrangements, not only because a succession of changes is most distressing to the whole body of persons who are engaged in the administration of the law, from the highest magistrate to the humblest practitioner, each of whom finds at each innovation large fields of his previous study, vast tracts of knowledge cultivated by his toil, laid waste, and made useless to him for ever: not only because, after each innovation, the labours of the Courts of law are necessarily for a long time much devoted to the settlement of the multiplied questions that arise out of them, to be settled in every case at the expense of the suitors: but because, as the history of all legislation, and none more than that of England, shews, the respect of a people for its laws depends materially upon the duration of them. Recent legislation seldom obtains the same degree of ready acquiescence, has but rarely as much affiance placed in it, or complete reverence accorded to it, as that which time has sanctioned, and experience set its stamp upon. Now, it is not much, perhaps, that public writers have the means of effecting towards the diffusion of that spirit of present satisfaction with the mode in which a new system of law works, which will eventually result in its general adoption as a final settlement; but something for that end it may be possible to accomplish by pointing out, as they occur, instances of benefits conferred by that system, in place of evils inflicted by the old, and perhaps also by inviting attention to cases where the principles of the later scheme, if pressed too far, and carried beyond the limit designed by Parliament, may, it is not impossible, lead to evils as great as some of those that were due to the old procedure—must, at any rate, lead to evils. Considering, then, that it will not be uninteresting for the large class of persons who in this country are attached to the cause of law reform to find placed before them from time to time any aids in the task of watching the practical operation of the reforms which have been effected, and also that it will not be useless to the practitioner who is engaged in the active pursuits of the Profession to be kept aware of the nature and tendency of their operation, and to have attention invited to the landmarks to be steered by and the shoals to be shunned, we propose, as proper occasions seem to present themselves, to devote some space to these objects; to illustrating from decided cases the benefits which have been derived from the new acts for the amendment of common-law procedure, as contrasted with the former system; and to pointing out some results—the effects, perhaps, which those acts have produced in modes of thinking and of looking at legal questions, rather than legitimate and direct applications of them—which may tend, if pursued further, to abridge the full benefit that might otherwise be derivable from their operation. The remainder of this article may be fitly devoted to some remarks in illustration of this. It is not wholly unusual at present to hear opinions, pretty confidently expressed, to the effect, that by consent almost anything may be done now, part of the new legislation being appealed to in support of the proposition. Now, if by a short inquiry into the law of consent of parties it can be clearly shewn what consent does not extend to effect, according to previous decisions, and then, by reference to the late Common-law Procedure Acts, it shall be made to appear that the language used does not import any further change in that law than is thereby specified and particularised, some advantage may perhaps be gained.

1. Now, first, it is a certain rule that consent of parties cannot give jurisdiction to a tribunal which is not of itself clothed with jurisdiction to try the case in question. (Vansittart v. Taylor, 4 El. & Bl. 912; Jones v. Owen, 5 Dowl. & L. 669; Reg. v. Hartshorn, 2 Burr. 740). Thus, parties cannot by consent give jurisdiction to the sheriff to try a tort, the writ of trial being by the statute only applicable to debts and pecuniary demands. (Smith v. Brown, 2 M. & W. 851. See Collis v. Groom, 1 Dowl., N. S., 496; Lawrence v. Willcock, 11 Ad. & El. 941; and Lismore v. Beadell, 6 Jur., part 1, p. 309). It is true, that where there is no inherent defect of jurisdiction in the constitution of the court, and all that the parties have agreed to waive is matter of form, there consensus tollit errorem; as where a local action has been tried in a wrong county; and the principle is, that each party, having attorned to the jurisdiction of the court, is too late, after the trial is over, to take advantage of the irregularity. (Furnival v. Stringer, 1 Bing. N. C. 68; Co. Litt. 126. a.) The same principle prevailed after imparlance, according to the ancient practice. (See Year Book, 22 Edw. 4, fol. 23, pl. 3; 22 Hen. 6, fol. 7).

2. Consent cannot oust jurisdiction. (Scott v. Avery, 5 H. L. C. 811; Foster v. Jackson, Hob. 56. See Wade v. Simeon, 13 M. & W. 647, and Lowndes v. The Earl of Stamford, 21 L. J., Q. B., 373). Even an act of Parliament cannot operate to oust the jurisdiction of the superior courts of Westminster, unless the intention to do so is expressed in direct terms, or follows by inevitable implication. (Cates v. Knight, 3 T. R. 442; The Earl of Shaftesbury v. Russell, 1 B. & Cr. 666).

3. Consent of parties does not avail to alter the settled rules of law, which are universally applicable, being established out of regard to the welfare of the community, and not for the advantage of particular descriptions of persons. Instances of this rule are obvious. Every one is aware that consent cannot set aside the marriage tie—cannot create a new estate having qualities unknown to the law: ex gr. no agreement between vendor and vendee can impress upon the fee-simple conveyed a character of descendibility to heirs female; still less can consent operate to set aside or elude the prohibitions of the common or statute law. Thus A. agrees to let and B. to take, for a term, certain premises, for the purpose of B. doing in them something prohibited by statute; when A. sues for the rent, B. has an answer in the above facts, and may retain the premises for the residue of the term rent free. (The Gas-light Company v. Turner, 5 Bing. N. C. 675; S. C., in error, 6 Bing. N. C. 701). So in all cases where the maxim "in pari delicto potior conditio defendentis" comes into operation. So the substantial rules of evidence cannot be dispensed with by consent: thus no agreement of the parties at the trial could set aside the fundamental rule, that all evidence must be on oath, or that the jury must be sworn; and generally it has been held that the Court at Nisi Prius will reject illegal evidence, though both parties agree to admit it; (Shaw v. Roberts, 2 Stark. 455); "for a judge is bound to administer the whole law of England, the laws of evidence included; and although a practice has crept in of allowing objections to evidence to be waived, it is always a question for the presiding judge whether he will permit that, and he would always be justified in calling on the parties to adhere to the law." (Per Pollock, C. B., in Barbit v. Allen, 21 L. J., Ex., 159, where the question was, whether the incompetency of a witness could be removed by consent. See Elizabeth Barker v. Dixie, Cas. t. Hardw. 264, where Lord Hardwicke, C. J., refused to permit it). On the other hand, there is no doubt that this or its equivalent frequently has been permitted; an instance of which occurs in Ross v. Hunter, (4 T. R. 34), where the plaintiff's letters to his correspondents were by consent admitted as evidence for him. The rule was adhered to in Owen v. Thomas, (3 My. & K. 357), in which case consent was not allowed to dispense with a stamp on documents that by law were not admissible without one. (See also Fortescue's case, 7 Car. & P. 495; Thornhill's case, 8 Car. & P. 575; Bennion v. Jewison, 12 Jur., part 1, p. 485; per Lawrence, J., in Hodgson v. Glover, 6 East, 326; and Barron v. Grillard, 3 V. & B. 166). So in Hardy's case, (24 Ho. St. Tr. 1360), a protest of certain peers in the House of Lords, which had been read by consent of the Attorney-General (Sir J. Scott) on the part of the prisoner, was excluded from the consideration of the jury as evidence. In cases where, however, the maxim "quilibet potest renunciare juri pro se introducto" applies—that is, where the provision of the common or statute law has been made for the benefit of a particular class of persons, or persons in particular situations—then consent is sufficient to dispense with the provision. Thus, it being a rule of evidence, established for the benefit both of plaintiffs and defendants, that documentary evidence shall be read in open court at length, the parties may consent that it shall be taken as read; so counsel for the prisoner may dispense with formal proof on the part of the Crown, and the conviction will be good. (8 Car. & P. 575). The question has never arisen whether the not uncommon practice of consenting that a cause should be tried by fewer than twelve jurymen is tenable on legal grounds; but upon the principle of the old authorities, which always speak of a verdict as the finding of twelve men, and upon the reason of the thing, it would seem to be doubtful whether such a verdict could be supported; for if a jury of eleven or ten may try the cause and give a legal verdict by consent, why may not a jury of three or two? It is to be observed, that the practice of withdrawing a juror by consent, in order to put a stop to the trial, proceeds on the supposition that eleven cannot try and give a verdict. It may also be observed, that admitting the parties who had given the consent to be prevented from disputing the verdict, it has yet to be decided that parties claiming through them might not, on occasion of an action in which such verdict and judgment recovered thereon was relied on, impeach the legal validity of it. If it be true that the meaning in law of jury is twelve men sworn to try issues, a less number, it would seem, are incompetent to try; and the decision of a tribunal which has no jurisdiction in the matter is a mere nullity. (The Attorney-General v. Hotham, 3 Turn. & R. 219; S. C., in error, 3 Russ. 415).

Other instances, in which the strict rules of evidence have been departed from at Nisi Prius upon the ground of consent, are not wanting. Thus, where a trial had resulted in the reservation of a special case, but in settling that a material fact had been omitted, so that the Court were not in a position to give judgment on it, and accordingly the parties went down to a second trial, the special case was there admitted to shew the facts, so far as it went, and its production was held to dispense with a second proof of those facts, although the jury was a fresh jury. (Van Wart v. Wolley, Ry. & M. 4). In like manner, if counsel on each side so conduct the cause as to lead to a conclusion that a certain fact by consent is taken as proved, it will be so taken for all purposes, although no testimony to it be adduced. (Stracy v. Blake, 1 M. & W. 168; Doe v. Roe, 1 El. & Bl. 279; Bolton v. Sherman, 2 M. & W. 403). But this practice will not be allowed, it seems, to develope itself further; for when, on a second trial, the defendant endeavoured to avoid part of the plaintiff's demand, by proving an admission which on the former trial had been made in the plaintiff's presence by his counsel in his opening, so as to shew the admission to have been made with his assent, the evidence was rejected, and though a new trial was granted, it was not on this point that the Court made the rule absolute. (Colledge v. Horn, 3 Bing. 119). These are, we believe, the principal points which have hitherto been laid down as to what consent of parties cannot effect, with their modifications. Then is there anything in the late Procedure Acts, or in the decisions which have taken place upon them, to shew any intention of the Legislature, as interpreted by the Courts, to give greater effect to consent? Now, the act of 1852, in sects. 35 and 36, gives powers of striking out or adding the names of persons to be plaintiffs in a case before trial and at the trial respectively, with the consent of such persons; but so far from those sections shewing any intention to leave this species of consent open to development in any improper manner, it is carefully guarded by requiring the judge to be satisfied that the amendment will be consonant to justice. Then, by sect. 42, parties are allowed to consent to raise a question of fact for the decision of the jury without pleadings, &c., the judge being here also required to be satisfied that there is a question of bonâ fide interest between them, and also that it is a fit question to be tried. Then, by sect. 43, they may consent beforehand to a sum being paid upon the finding of the jury, by or to one or the other of them, as the case may turn out, &c.; and so, by sect. 46, they may consent to present a question of law for the decision of the Court without pleadings; and this, it has been settled, can only be available in case of a question in which the parties have a bonâ fide interest, &c., (6 C. B. 100); and they may, (sect. 47), as before, consent to the payment of a sum of money, accordingly as the judgment shall go. Then, sect. 179 establishes, as to ejectment, the practice of settling a special case by consent, and leave of a judge.

These are the principal enactments with regard to consent of parties in the act of 1852.

(To be concluded in our next number.)

The rule of law, that every man is presumed to be of sane mind till the contrary is shewn, is in its application sometimes pushed beyond its legitimate limits. The difficulty seems to arise from assigning too much weight to it when met by rebutting evidence, and in not rightly appreciating the force of such evidence in shifting the burthen of proof from one side to the other.

An instance of the misapplication of the presumption in question was afforded in the case of Sutton v. Sadler and Another, (3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1150). The action was ejectment by the heir against devisees. The defendants, admitting the heirship, claimed and exercised the right to begin; they proved the will upon which they relied, and gave evidence of the testator's competency to make it. The plaintiff thereupon gave evidence impeaching the testator's competency à nativitate. The learned judge who tried the cause, in summing up, told the jury, that "the heir-at-law was entitled to recover unless a will was proved; but that when a will was produced, and the execution of it proved, the law presumed sanity, and therefore the burthen of proof was shifted, and that the devisees must prevail, unless the heir-at-law established the incompetency of the testator; and that if the evidence was such as to make it a measuring cast, and leave them in doubt, they ought to find for the defendants." The jury having found for the defendants, the Court of Common Pleas made absolute a rule for a new trial upon the ground of misdirection. The Court, in delivering their judgment, start with the well-established rule, that as "he who relies on a will, in opposition to the title of the heir-at-law, must allege that it is the will of a person of sound and disposing mind, he must therefore prove it." This he may do by producing a will, not irrational on the face of it, and proving its execution: then, if no other evidence is offered, the jury ought to find for the will. The party alleging the will is thus far aided by the presumption of sanity. The Court say that this presumption is "an inference to be made by a jury from the absence of evidence to shew that a party does not enjoy that soundness which experience proves to be the general condition of the human mind." The presumption of sanity, therefore, has the effect, in the first instance, of shifting the burthen of proof, and it then lies on the party impugning the will to give some evidence of incompetency on the part of the testator. But supposing this to be done, there is an end to the presumption; it has discharged its office, and the party propounding the will is then remitted to his original position; he must prove by evidence that it is the will of a person of sound and disposing mind, "and the Court or jury who have to decide the question in dispute must decide upon the whole of the evidence so given, and if it does not satisfy them that the will is valid, they ought to pronounce against it. . . . And when the whole matter is before the jury on evidence given by both sides, they ought not to affirm that a document is the will of a competent testator unless they believe that it really is so." In the case before the Court the devisees had not relied upon the primâ facie case, but had at once given evidence of competency; they had, in fact, not availed themselves at all of the presumption in their favour. The Court, however, held that the result was the same, the only difference being that the onus of proof remained on them throughout the progress of the cause, instead of being shifted, as it might have been at one period of it, upon the other side. We may add, that the Court fully recognised the principle, that although there is the general presumption of sanity, yet when insanity has been admitted or proved to have existed at any particular period, the presumption then changes, and it is presumed that unsoundness of mind continues, and the party setting up any instrument executed after insanity has manifested itself must shew recovery. (See The Attorney-General v. Parnther, 3 Bro. C. C. 441, and Groom v. Thomas, 2 Hagg. 434).

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JANUARY 2, 1858.

(Concluded from p. 495).

In the Procedure Act of 1854 the 1st section gives power, by consent in writing of the parties, to try questions of fact before a judge sitting alone; and on this section a decision, after full discussion, has taken place; and the whole length that the Courts have gone is to resolve that the writing is not material, it being indisputable that the consent was actually given: and surely it must be quite unnecessary to insist upon a preliminary form, which the Legislature only prescribed for the purpose of facilitating and ascertaining the proof of consent, if that proof is sufficiently ascertained by other means. (Andrews v. Elliott, 1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1046; 2 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 663, in error). It will be seen that the consent here was not wanted to give jurisdiction; the judge had a general jurisdiction to try the species of case in question. Another novel effect is given to consent by sect. 15, enabling parties by consent to enlarge the time for an arbitrator making his award. Then, by consent, the parties may arrange that error shall not be brought on a special case to which they have agreed. (Sect. 32). But more than one decision lays down the meaning to be, that this section should not have a retrospective operation; shewing no tendency, therefore, in the Courts to enlarge the sphere of consent. Another point in which a considerable power has been attributed to consent is this. It has been held that the Courts, in construing the Bills of Exchange Act, will not, without the consent of parties, assume the power of granting a rule to set aside a judge's order made under that act, so as to be returnable at chambers on a day after the last day of term. (Pollock v. Turnock, 3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 92). Perhaps the greatest extent to which the operation of consent has yet been carried occurs in cases arising under the Interpleader Act, (which, however, are not, properly speaking, cases of consent of parties); for in some cases it has been considered, that where a judge had done that which was in excess of his statutory jurisdiction, the objection has been got over on the ground of the constructive consent which the plaintiff and claimant to the goods had given to his exercise of a summary jurisdiction. (Harrison v. Wright, 13 M. & W. 816; see per Parke, B., in Gosset v. Howard, 10 Q. B. 445; Carlewis v. Pocock, 5 Dowl. 381). And a judge's order made by consent cannot, it seems, be appealed from. (Hall v. West, 1 Dowl. & L. 412; Shortridge v. Young, Id. 416). However this may be, it is by no means easy to say what is the proper effect of a judge's order made by consent in a matter beyond his authority. It is easier to say what it is not; for it is not an award, for it wants the formalities of an award, and is bad, as such, for want of the stamp. If it is an order, can it be made a rule of Court, (being beyond the legal competence of the judge to make), so that execution may issue on it, under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 18? Or, supposing that the parties who had agreed to it could not be heard to impeach it, would it be valid to affect the interests of third parties? (See Gibbs v. Flight, 13 C. B. 803; 17 Jur., part 1, p. 1034). The mode of giving consents to judges' orders for signing judgments is regulated by the Practice Rules of Hilary Term, 1853, rr. 155, 156, 157, which shew the determination of the judges to confine within narrow limits the operation of consent, and to make provision against undue extension of the system, and its perversion to fraudulent purposes. This is in accordance with the spirit of the provision relative to the consent of a bankrupt trader to an order, under the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 136, and the decisions upon it. (Acraman v. Herniman, 16 Q. B. 998. See also Braine v. Manson, 9 Dowl. 748; Stevens v. Miller, 3 Man. & G. 228; Brooks v. Hodson, 7 Man. & G. 529; and Wilkins v. Casey, 6 Jur. 807). It has also been decided that an action will not lie for disobedience to a judge's order, when made by consent, any more than when made hostilely. (Hookpayton v. Bussell, 10 Exch. 24). And the case is not altered by the circumstance of there being contained in the order an undertaking by the parties, founded on a good consideration, contrary to an expression of opinion attributed to the present Lord Wensleydale in Wentworth v. Bullen, (9 B. & Cr. 840); nor is a consent, indorsed upon a judge's summons, without either party ever having attended at chambers, or any order having been drawn up, of any avail at all: it does not prevent either party from taking any steps, just as if no such summons had been taken out or indorsed. (Joddrell v. ——, 4 Taunt. 253). Nor has a consent, at the trial of an action of detinue, the effect, under the Common-law Procedure Act of 1854, sect. 78, of giving the court or a judge jurisdiction which they had not otherwise. (Chilton v. Carrington, 1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 477). In fact, in that case it was found that the consent of the parties at the trial to discharge the jury from finding the value of the chattels made the record perfectly unmanageable, and the consent, though absolute, was not held to preclude the parties to object to the judge's order which had been made in pursuance of it. On the other hand, the consent of the parties to take a verdict is always held to estop either of them from asking for a certificate for costs, the answer in such cases being, "You have agreed that the verdict shall be entered in a particular way: we cannot make a new agreement for you." (See 15 C. B. 740, 741). Another description of cases may be adduced in proof of the limited influence which the Courts assign to consent of parties. Where a defendant has pleaded several pleas, on which issues are joined, and it appears at the trial that the verdict must be for the defendant on one plea, which goes to the whole cause of action, it is common for the parties to consent to have the jury discharged as to the other issues. In such case the defendant is entitled to the general costs of the cause, but neither party has the costs of the issues on which they have agreed that the jury shall be discharged; (Vallance v. Adams, 2 Dowl. 118; Allenby v. Proudlock, 4 Ad. & El. 326); and although in such a case, viz. where the defendant is entitled to his verdict on an issue going to the whole, the judge, it would seem, (see Gray on Costs, 288, 289), has no power to discharge a jury from deciding the other issues without consent of parties, yet this is by reason that the plaintiff has a right to the costs of the remaining issues, in case they are found for him, (Spencer v. Hamerton, 4 Ad. & El. 418), by the statute of Anne, and a right to insist to go on and have the jury's opinion on those remaining issues, by virtue of the general right the suitor has of insisting that his case shall be brought to a legal conclusion. There is no doubt, however, of the authority of a judge to discharge the jury generally, where it has become manifest that they cannot agree in any verdict; in which case also each party pays his own costs; (Seeley v. Powers, 3 Dowl. 372; Waite v. Spurgin, 4 Dowl. 575; Browne v. Clarke, 12 M. & W. 25); and the fact of the consent of parties being given does not make any difference, nor amount to an agreement to refer the right to costs to the ultimate result of a fresh trial, (Bostock v. The North Staffordshire Railway Company, 16 Jur., part 1, p. 726), nor to a termination of the suit. (Everett v. Youells, 3 B. & Ad. 349). Nor does the consent of the plaintiff at the outset of a trial, that the damages, if any, should be merely nominal, preclude him from applying for a new trial, (his consent having been given on the supposition and expectation that all the issues should be tried), if only two out of three issues were decided; and the jury, being unable to agree on the third, (which was material), had been discharged by the judge, on the illness of one of them, from giving a verdict on it. (Tinkler v. Rowland, 4 Ad. & El. 868). So, a party consenting to withdraw a juror is held to the consequences, and must pay his own costs, even in cases of hardship. (Hammond v. Thorpe, 1 C., M., & R. 64).

On the whole, it is submitted, there is nothing in the late legislation, or in the interpretation which the Courts have put upon any of the provisions of it, to indicate any intention or leaning towards an increased power in parties to give jurisdiction, or do or submit to anything in itself illegal, by consent, beyond what they have ever possessed.

A TREATISE on the LAW of EASEMENTS. The Second Edition. By CHARLES JAMES GALE, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law.

H. Sweet, 3, Chancery-lane, Fleet-street.

REPORT of the DIRECTORS of the CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, presented at the Annual General Meeting, held at the Society's Office, No. 13, St. James's-square, London, FRIDAY, the 27th November, 1857.

It will be in the recollection of the Proprietors that at two Extraordinary General Meetings, held on the 1st and 28th January last, the period for holding the Annual Meetings was altered from March to November, in order that earlier publicity might be given to the state of the Society's affairs at the end of June, that being the period fixed by the Deed for the termination of each financial year. In consequence of this alteration no Meeting took place in March last, and it is therefore now the duty of the Directors to lay before this Meeting a statement of the transactions of the Society for the two years ending the 30th June, 1857.

The number of New Policies issued within that period was 1097;

The amount of Assurances granted was 605,300*l*.; and

The New Premiums arising therefrom amount to 20,729*l*. per annum.

The Assurance Fund, notwithstanding the payment in cash of 65,384*l*. as Bonus since the declaration in January, has increased during the two years by no less a sum than 55,676*l*.

From these facts it will be readily perceived that during the period under notice the progress of the Society has been in no degree retarded by the effects of the war, by the state of the money market, or by the active competition which has existed amongst kindred institutions.

After the full and comprehensive statements made at the Extraordinary Meeting in January last, when the SIXTH BONUS was declared, the Directors feel that there is little further now to communicate; but they cannot refrain from mentioning that the Bonus then divided, which averaged 46*l*. per cent. in Reversion, and 27*l*. per cent. in cash, on the Premiums received since 1851, has given general satisfaction, and has tended materially to sustain and advance the high estimation in which the Society has been so long held by the Public.

An Account of the Proceedings at the last BONUS MEETING, setting forth the Assets and Liabilities of the Society, and also the FAVOURABLE POSITION IN WHICH PERSONS WHO NOW ASSURE will be placed, can be obtained on application.

LIFE DEPARTMENT.—Under the provisions of an act of Parliament, this Company now offers to future Insurers FOUR-FIFTHS of the PROFITS, with QUINQUENNIAL DIVISION, or a LOW RATE OF PREMIUM without participation of Profits.

The next Division of Profits will be declared in June, 1860, when all Participating Policies which shall have subsisted at least one year at Christmas, 1859, will be allowed to share in the Profits.

At the five Divisions of Profits made by this Company, the total Reversionary Bonuses added to the Policies have exceeded 913,000*l*.

At the last valuation at Christmas, 1854, the Assurances in force amounted to upwards of 4,240,000*l*., the Income from the Life Branch in 1854 was more than 200,000*l*., and the Life Assurance Fund (independent of the Guarantee Capital) exceeded 1,700,000*l*.

FOREIGN RISKS.—The Extra Premiums required for the East and West Indies, the British Colonies, and the northern parts of the United States of America, have been materially reduced.

INVALID LIVES.—Persons who are not in such sound health as would enable them to Insure their Lives at the Tabular Premiums may have their Lives Insured at extra Premiums.

LOANS granted on Life Policies to the extent of their values, provided such Policies shall have been effected a sufficient time to have attained in each case a value not under 50*l*.

ASSIGNMENTS OF POLICIES—Written Notices of, received and registered.

Medical fees paid by the Company, and no charge will be made for Policy Stamps.

Notice is hereby given,—That Fire Policies which expire at Christmas must be renewed within fifteen days at this Office, or with Mr. SAMS, No. 1, St. James's-street, (corner of Pall-mall); or with the Company's Agents throughout the Kingdom; otherwise they become void.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JANUARY 9, 1858.

ALTHOUGH the principle laid down and acted upon by Courts of equity, that a trustee shall not profit by his trust, is doubtless most sound and beneficial when confined within due limits, it has, we conceive, in certain cases, been carried beyond them. Where, for instance, a trustee speculates with trust funds, where he renews a lease belonging to his cestui que trust in his own name, or where he purchases the trust property, in all such cases the operation of the rule is most just which deprives the trustee of any benefit which he may have gained by such transactions. No person could, with any shew of reason, contend, that when trust property has been embarked by a trustee in any undertaking not authorised by the trust, he should pay to his cestui que trust merely the ordinary rate of interest, and appropriate to himself the rest of the profits which may have been gained in consequence of the risk to which the trust property was improperly subjected. So, when a trustee himself purchases the trust property, no one can doubt the propriety of the decisions which set aside such transactions, for as it is the duty of the trustee to gain the greatest possible advantage for his cestui que trust, he, by becoming himself a purchaser, places himself in a position in which his interest becomes antagonistic to his duty, for his own interest would doubtless induce him to purchase at the lowest price, and no person, however fair may be his intentions, would be able to judge how far he had made use of the knowledge of the property which he had acquired in consequence of his fiduciary position, or how far he may have sacrificed his duty to his interest. Where, however, trustees or executors are forbidden, in the absence of any direction on the part of the creator of the trust, or of any contract with the cestui que trust, to receive any remuneration for the performance of their duties, often most laborious, and involving a great sacrifice of time and labour, we cannot but think the operation of the rule is carried too far. Take, for instance, the case of executors, perhaps themselves engaged in trade on their own account, carrying on, pursuant to trusts for that purpose, and greatly for the benefit of their cestuis que trust, the trade of their testator; according to the present law they are not entitled to charge a single farthing as compensation for their trouble or loss of time, however great it may have been. (Brocksopp v. Barnes, 5 Mad. 90). Many of our colonies have, however, felt it advisable or necessary to alter the law in this respect. Thus in the West Indies a commission of 6*l.* per cent. is allowed to trustees and guardians as long as they personally take care of the management and improvement of the estates committed to their charge. So executors in the East Indies are entitled to a commission of 5*l.* per cent. upon the receipts and payments. (Chetham v. Lord Audley, 4 Ves. 72).

In the greater part of the United States the rule has been altered. In New York, so far back as the year 1817, an act made it lawful for the Court of Chancery, in the settlement of accounts of guardians, executors, and administrators, to make to them a reasonable allowance for their services over and above their expenses. (In re Roberts, 3 Johns. Ch. 43). An order in Chancery made in the same year (Id. 630) reduced these provisions to some precision, by directing that the allowance for receiving and paying money should be 5 per cent. on all sums not exceeding 1000 dollars, 2½ per cent. on any excess between 1000 and 5000, and 1 per cent. for all above that amount. The revised statutes have since adopted the same rule, (2 Rev. St. 93), with the addition, that any provision made by a testator for specific compensation is to be deemed a full satisfaction for an executor's services, unless by a written instrument filed with the surrogate he elect to renounce such legacy.

The compensation to trustees, being thus the subject of positive enactment in New York, seems to have been thought a matter of right, and not of grace, and is not forfeited by misconduct on their part. Their commissions are allowed to them even though they should be charged with compound interest, (Vanderheyden v.

Vanderheyden, 1 Sandf. Ch. 406), or have been guilty of gross negligence. (Meacham v. Sterns, 9 Paige, 405). This, however, seems to be carrying the principle of compensation too far, for assuming that a trustee is justly entitled to remuneration, his only claim is for the proper performance of his duties; and as a paid agent renders himself liable to damages for any loss occasioned by his negligence, so we think that a trustee, who is paid for the performance of the duties of his office, would justly incur a forfeiture of his commission if he has been guilty of any serious misconduct, or a breach of trust.

In this country, although observations have frequently been made with regard to the hardship with which the rule often operates, the Legislature has not deemed it proper as yet to interfere. Since, however, in addition to the former liability of trustees for breaches of trust in certain cases, they are now rendered liable to criminal proceedings for fraudulent breaches of trust, it will, perhaps, be found politic, or even necessary, in order to get persons to act as trustees or executors, to hold out some inducements which may in some degree compensate them for the expenditure of time and trouble in the duties of such offices. It may be said, in support of the present rule, that as the acceptance of every trust is voluntary, and the person who accepts it knows, or ought to know, that the office is honorary, he has no just ground for complaint. It has, however, been well remarked by Mr. Justice Story, that to "say that no one is obliged to take upon himself the duty of a trustee is to evade and not to answer the objection. The policy of the law ought to be such as to induce honourable men, without a sacrifice of their private interests, to accept the office, and to take away the temptation to abuse the trust for mere selfish purposes, as the only indemnity for services of an important and anxious character." (Story's Eq. Jur. s. 1268, note). These observations of Mr. Justice Story put the question in its true light, and if the result of the present law is to prevent the best and most fitting persons, and sometimes all persons, from accepting a trust which if adequately remunerated they might be willing to undertake, it certainly would be useful to consider whether the alteration of the law effected in the United States, and in some of our colonies, might not be altogether, or with some modifications, adopted in this country. The effect of the present law must be obvious to every practitioner, who must frequently have observed with what difficulty prudent persons are induced to act as trustees or executors, and that too often persons utterly unqualified for the duties of such offices are appointed to and accept them, without caring or thinking about their responsibilities or duties.

Hence arises much loss to trust estates, sometimes by actual dishonesty on the part of trustees, oftener perhaps from their carelessness and ignorance of the manner in which the affairs of the trust should be managed. But assuming that proper trustees have been appointed, and have accepted the trusts, if they are of an onerous and complicated character, necessarily involving the trustees in some risk, and taking up much of their time and attention, and setting aside the consideration of the injustice of requiring so much from them gratuitously, we believe that if they were fairly and properly remunerated, in the great majority of cases the cestuis que trust would be more than compensated, by the additional care which would be bestowed upon their affairs. It is not easy to say what the amount of remuneration should be; but there would be obvious difficulties in making it depend upon the particular circumstances of each trust, and the amount of time and labour bestowed upon it. There should be some general rule laid down applicable to all trusts. "It is evident," says an eminent American judge, "that all attempts to assess the value of services performed in trusts, by placing each case upon its peculiar circumstances and intrinsic merits, must terminate in a power of mere discretion—a discretion to a great extent arbitrary. This mode of assessment would be to produce extensive litigation in adjusting the rewards of executors, administrators, and guardians." (M'Whorter v. Benson, Hopk. 28).

In fixing, however, upon a scale of remuneration for persons in fiduciary positions, we cannot but think that it should be calculated, not only with reference to the care and trouble which the administration of trust property generally requires, but also with reference to the risk of loss which trustees of the highest integrity, and the best wishes honestly and honourably to perform the duties intrusted to them, too frequently incur.

THE RECENT DECISION OF THE COURT OF COMMON PLEAS WITH REGARD TO CROSSED CHEQUES.

It is now several months since we invited attention to the defective state of the law with regard to crossed cheques, and the perplexity in which the obscure and insufficient provisions of the stat. 19 & 20 Vict. c. 25, were likely to involve transactions carried on through the medium of these instruments. (Ante, p. 163). The case which suggested our remarks (Simmons v. Taylor) depended upon the construction of the statute referred to; and the judgment in the case, recently delivered by the Court of Common Pleas, (3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1305), will have a most important effect upon the law in question. The decision has caused much anxiety amongst mercantile men, who have been in the habit of reposing a blind security in the protection provided by the statute, and now find, from the interpretation which the Court has given to the act, that their confidence has been misplaced.

The judgment is founded upon the consideration of two questions—first, whether, in order to hold the banker liable where he pays over the counter a cheque once crossed, the statute requires that the draft should exhibit the crossing when presented; and, secondly, whether the crossing is a part of the draft, so that an erasure of the crossing would amount to forgery. The decision upon the first point is in the affirmative; but upon the second, in the negative. The Chief Justice concurred in the judgment; but, with regard to the second point, stated that he did not do so without considerable doubt and hesitation. The result of the decision is, that the safeguard to the public from crossing a cheque is scarcely more than it was before the act. As the subject is one of great importance, we propose in the following observations to consider the reasoning upon which the judgment upon both points has proceeded. It was doubtless a matter of great difficulty and nicety which the Court had to determine; but the conclusions arrived at seem to have been prompted rather by considerations of expediency, and by a refined and subtle interpretation, than by due regard for the obvious spirit and intention of the act. The judgment commences by briefly reviewing the state of the law before the statute. The crossing upon a cheque at that time did not limit the authority of the drawee to paying the party or firm whose name was written across it; it did not amount to a direction; it merely had the effect of calling for vigilance on the part of the drawee; and where a banker paid a cheque otherwise than to the party designated by the crossing, the question was not whether he had acted contrary to orders, but whether he had been guilty of negligence. The crossing formed no part of the instrument, and in no way altered its effect. (Per Parke, B., in Bellamy v. Majoribanks, 7 Exch. 403). "This statute was passed for the purpose of making such matter written across a cheque, whether written by the drawee or payee, operate as a direction to the banker to pay in that mode only." The words of the statute are—"Whereas doubts have arisen as to the obligations of bankers with respect to cross-written drafts; and whereas it would conduce to the ease of commerce, the security of property, and the prevention of crime, if drawers or holders of drafts on bankers payable to bearer or to order on demand were enabled effectually to direct the payment of the same to be made only to or through some banker; be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—In every case where a draft on any banker made payable to bearer or to order on demand bears across its face an address in written or stamped letters of the name of any banker, or of the words 'and company,' in full or abbreviated, either of such additions shall have the force of a direction to the bankers upon whom such draft is made, that the same is to be paid only to or through some banker, and the same shall be payable only to or through some banker." Thus much having been premised, Mr. Justice Cresswell, who delivered the judgment, goes on to consider the first point—"This, I apprehend, does not apply to the time when the cheque is issued; for the preamble contemplates the crossing of a cheque, not by the drawer only, but also by the holder, whoever he may be; nor can it be construed as if the words had been "if a cheque at any time bears," for if after it is issued uncrossed a holder may have the benefit of the enactment by crossing it, why should not another holder have a right to erase that, and restore it to the condition in which it was issued? Considering this, and also the difficulty of holding that anything can operate as a direction to the banker which is not exhibited to him, I think the statute must mean, that the cheque is to bear the crossing when presented. If so, the cheque in question did not bear it, and the banker was not prohibited from paying it otherwise than to or through a banker." Now, we readily admit, that upon the construction of the statute it contemplates the crossing being made either by the drawer or holder, whoever he may be; but looking at the force and effect that such crossing would then acquire by the statute, that the cheque then "shall be payable only to or through some banker," is it to be inferred, as the judgment seems to infer, that because the crossing may at any time be affixed, a corresponding authority is permitted to any holder to erase it? It is obvious, that if the view taken by the Court of Common Pleas in this part of the judgment is supported, the statute is of no avail; for if any holder may restore a crossed cheque to its original condition, a dash of the pen would at any time destroy the security upon which the drawer or holder who crossed it has relied, and his protection would be gone from the moment that the draft left his hands. This consideration alone, that the act would be rendered utterly futile, is incontrovertible to our minds to shew that this part of the decision is unsound. We do not suppose that the term "restore," which is used in the judgment, in speaking of what any bonâ fide holder may do, means restoration, by means of some chemical process or otherwise, to such a condition as to deceive the eye, for such an act would be inconsistent with any honest purpose. If the term means, as it must mean, restoring by striking out, the result we have described must follow, and the act must be rendered nugatory. Benignæ faciendæ sunt interpretationes propter simplicitatem laicorum ut res magis valeat quam pereat; et verba intentioni, non e contrà, debent inservire. Would it not then have been more reasonable and more consistent with the spirit and intention of this statute to hold, that the legal effect of the crossing having undergone an alteration by the force of the statute, and now affecting so materially the negotiability of the instrument, it became part of the instrument from the time that it was affixed? If so, whatever right a holder might have to cross an uncrossed cheque, no subsequent holder would be entitled to erase it, or strike it out, without, by his violation of recognised principles, rendering the instrument void, and at least the immediate object of the act, the security of the property in the draft, would have been attained. In the present case one of two innocent persons must suffer; but it is not a question of hardship that is to be dealt with, but of law; and, whatever may be the inconveniences resulting from a different exposition of the act, the propriety of a construction which renders the act useless is open to serious doubts. The judgment then notices the difficulty of holding an addition which has been erased "a direction" to the banker, because "not exhibited." But is it not a reasonable answer to this objection, that, whether attached by the drawer or holder, it thereupon becomes a material part of the cheque, and that there is as much reason for holding an unlawful erasure equivalent to forgery as in holding a banker responsible for paying a forged cheque? It is to be observed that in this part of the judgment it is assumed that a crossing may be at any time erased, and therefore that the point which the judgment in the second branch proposes to establish is assumed; but when we come to consider the second branch it will be seen that the reasons for the decision upon the second point proceed upon the same assumption as to the right of any holder to erase. With regard to the second point in the case the judgment proceeds as follows:—"But it is further to be considered whether the crossing was part of the cheque, so that the erasure of it would amount to a forgery of another and different cheque from that which the plaintiff drew, for if it had that effect the plaintiff never drew the cheque that was paid, and the banker cannot claim credit for it. In the first place, it does not appear that the Legislature contemplated making the crossing a part of the cheque. The statute says that it shall have the force of a direction, not that it shall alter the instrument. If it were to have that effect, it would be a strange thing to give to the payee or any subsequent holder power to alter a cheque without avoiding it, and would have the effect of creating a new sort of instrument hitherto unknown to the law, viz. a cheque payable to bearer conditionally—that is, if presented by or through a banker. Again: it seems strange to enact that one holder may cross a cheque, and a subsequent holder may not erase that crossing, and restore it to the condition in which it was issued. If he may, then at all events the crossing can only be part of the cheque as long as it remains upon it. Another reason for holding it not to be part of the cheque is this—that in such case, if a cheque once crossed with a banker's name, afterwards erased, were presented by or through a banker and paid, (which is all that is required in the case of a cheque bearing the crossing when presented), the banker could not claim credit for the payment so made—a result which the Legislature does not appear to have contemplated or intended." In considering the first point it was impossible to avoid some observations which might find a place here. Does it appear so clearly as the judgment assumes, that the Legislature did not contemplate making the crossing a part of the cheque? Some reasons to the contrary have been already presented; both the words and spirit of the act appear to us to shew the reverse. The preamble recites that it would conduce to the ease of commerce &c. if drawers or holders of drafts were enabled "effectually to direct the payment of the same to be made only to or through some banker;" and the enacting words are, "either of such additions shall have the force of a direction to the banker upon whom such draft is made, that the same is to be paid only to or through some banker, and the same shall be payable only to or through some banker." Before the act, the crossing, as it has been observed, did not restrain its negotiability; but by these concluding words, as strong as prohibitive words can be, the negotiability of the draft is effectually restrained, except upon the condition of presentment through a banker. This incident of a crossed cheque having been imparted to it by the act, it seems to us that the character of the instrument became altered, and, to some extent, an instrument new to the law was created. If the effect of the act was to create such instrument, express terms for that purpose would have been superfluous; but we cannot see that, under the circumstances, there is any reason for surprise at the statute having this result. If, under the old law, the instrument, with such incidents as then attached to it, was insufficient for the requirements of commerce and protection of property, why should the crossing be regarded as less a part of the instrument, because it cannot be so regarded without also holding that it may be affixed upon an uncrossed cheque, and so qualify and control its operation, as that to some extent a crossed cheque after the statute ceased to be the same instrument which it was before? The judgment seems to infer that the Legislature did not contemplate making the crossing part of the cheque, because "the statute says it shall have the force of a direction, not that it shall alter the instrument." Where intention was so clear, surely express terms were not to be expected; and is it not hypercritical to allow the use of the word "direction" to derogate from the construction in favour of a meaning which is so evident? Lastly, with respect to that part of the decision which notices the strangeness of an enactment that one holder may cross, and that a subsequent holder may not erase that crossing, and restore it to the condition in which the cheque was issued—a matter which has been already considered—we really think nothing could be more reasonable or proper. It is of the very spirit and essence of the act that a crossing once put on should not be erased; for obviously, if this might be done, it would be utterly useless for the drawer, payee, or holder to affix it, and the statute would fail to provide the intended protection. Upon these grounds which we have stated the decision appears to us unsatisfactory, and the doubts entertained by the Chief Justice well founded.

As the law now stands, a banker is only bound to recognise additions of the description mentioned in the act, provided they are exhibited upon the draft when presented: they form no part of the draft, and, as it seems, cannot be the subject of forgery. The result is, that any holder may affix, alter, or cancel them at pleasure, and the expressed intention of the act to facilitate commerce, secure property, and prevent crime, has altogether failed. It is, however, to be borne in mind, that although the law, as it now is, is inadequate to the magnitude of the interests affected by it, it is by this decision rendered clear and intelligible, and embarrassing questions, which must have arisen if an opposite view of the case had been adopted, have been effectually avoided. A more perfect measure must be sought from the Legislature; and it will be a question for the commercial public what provisions the exigencies of trade demand. To us it appears that it should be of the very essence of such a measure to enact, with qualifications, that the crossing upon a draft should be deemed part of the draft; that a special crossing—that is, one naming a particular banker—should under no circumstances be altered or erased; and, lastly, that no crossing in blank should be altered or erased, except for the single purpose of crossing the draft specially.

IN "The Companion to the Almanack for 1858" there are some remarks by Mr. Charles Knight on the modern fashion of forming societies for the discovery of wants and grievances, which are well worthy of attention, in spite of the unfortunate style in which they are written. The little sheets of bad paper, containing in bad print driblets of what a graceless pupil calls "amendment rot," which the Law Amendment Society distribute as freely and thanklessly as if they were assignats, have tended very much to depreciate law-reform stock in the market, and Mr. Field is an instructive example of the deteriorating effect of association without a definite and practicable object. He is a law reformer from taste and conviction. He was a law reformer before the cause, having grown fashionable, became disgraced by falling into the hands of political adventurers—the Sir R.'s and Sir F.'s, and others in high or low station, who are ready to lay the axe to any tree—the taller and sounder the better, since its fall will produce more éclat. Hence we always listen to Mr. Field with respect, even when we cannot agree with him as to the seat of the evil he would cure, or as to the remedy he would apply. And in his crusade against all manner of evil we think, that, whether from prejudice against the rooks who dwell aloft, or from envy of their position, he is seeking to grub up, under the name of "root of evil," a very useful and ornamental piece of timber. It requires, indeed, all Mr. Field's ability to cover, and he barely succeeds in covering, the ludicrousness of the connexion he would establish between, 1, the exclusion of solicitors from the bar, and, 2, the payment for certain legal services, according to verbiage—as roots, and the evils of the law—as stock, stem, branches, and fruit. All the upas of Westminster nourished by a vacuum of attornies and a plenum of folios! But evil communications are spoiling him, as they have spoiled more eminent reformers. Since he joined these societies his aims have become wild and random; sheep and windmills have undergone his assaults; even his style is rapidly falling to the level of the Law Amendment Journal. His last pamphlet, though the shortest, is the most tedious we have seen. Out of the sixteen pages we can gather not a scrap of information, nor indeed anything but these two suggestions—1, that the amendment of legal procedure is of pressing necessity, and, 2, that it should be based on and secured by accurate and detailed returns of the business done and costs incurred in all the courts. Very likely these suggestions might fructify in the mind of a practical, earnest man, but no man would have ventured to produce them in the crude, nebulous, useless form in which they appear in Mr. Field's pamphlet, if he had not been encouraged by the empty reverberations of a mutual applause society.

In attacking the privileges of the Bar, Mr. Field shews a little more energy, but very little discretion:—

"Differing in this respect from every other occupation, the legal regulation of advocacy—if I may call that legal which is really above and outside all legal control—is placed in the hands of the great lawyers, and, as I have just said, is above all judicial and legislative control. Its members form a corporation or guild which govern the most important of all civil occupations by its own wisdom, or interests, or whims, or by a mixture of all three, and which, by regulations historically quite modern, (some only a few years old), has entirely severed advocacy from the lower pursuits of the Profession, and has done this so as effectually to debar any systematic addition to its own ranks from that source from which nature, (the true guide in these matters), if left unrestricted, would have recruited them. Did a cobbler desire to go the bar, (and to the honour of the Bar be it said that that supposition is not a fanciful one), he might be called to the bar three years after entering himself at one of the inns of court, continuing to work at his stall all the while. But if my learned and able friend now near me desired to be called to the bar, he must have been struck off the roll of attornies, and have entirely and bonâ fide ceased to act either as a solicitor or in any of the other legal capacities mentioned in the recent rule of the four inns for three years. Three years is enough for a cobbler, who is all the while continuing his practice, to learn all the preliminary law necessary to his admission to the bar—three years' abstinence from practice and forgetfulness of his previous knowledge would be imposed upon my learned friend."

Mr. Field will be glad to learn that cobblers and attornies are upon the same footing. Abstinence from the pursuit of any trade or business is in all the inns a necessary condition to the keeping of terms.

Mr. Field then suggests two questions—first, "Is this exclusion of attornies and solicitors expedient for the public?" And, secondly, "Is it expedient that the Bar itself should be the legislature on such a subject, and have power, at its own simple will and ipse dixit, to exclude from the trade of advocacy any bodies of men whatever—most of all, to exclude those who more than all others would be most competent to enter into such trade in rivalry with themselves?"

"With the first of these two questions Mr. Bulmer's paper deals, as far as it goes, very ably. It omits, however, to point out to the public (as I conceive we are bound to point out if we are to be outspoken on the subject) that the inexpediency of all such regulations is the leading doctrine of political economy, and that such regulations are opposed to that principle of 'unrestricted competition,' as one of our great statesmen calls it, which is in future, he says, to be the governing policy of this kingdom. Besides all monetary considerations turning on the fact that the present regulations constantly require two men to be employed on work that one would otherwise efficiently perform, (the elucidation of which considerations would alone afford materials for a paper), the interest of the employer (the public) plainly is to have as large a labour market to choose its legal workmen out of as possible, and to get rid of every regulation which would prevent the removal of its labourers from one point of legal employment to another."

"Moreover, such regulations prevent the legal workman from applying himself to that one particular branch of legal occupation to which, after trial and upon experience, he finds himself most fitted; and, on the contrary, they require him, before he has had any experience, to decide to which particular branch the whole of his future life shall be devoted. To the adoption of the opposite course the remarkable excellence of the American lawyers is to be attributed."

Mr. Field has probably taken the American lawyers at their own estimate. No one who judges them by their text-books and reports will rate them highly. No doubt the Anglo-Saxon race in America is capable of contributing the same amount of talent to the legal profession that it does in England, but there are other outlets for ability there. The legal profession does not offer the same peculiar attractions to cultivated talent that it does here; and, whatever may be the cause, the law in the United States is very much less scientific and exact than it is here. America has produced few good treatises—scarcely one of remarkable excellence; and its judicial precedents will not bear comparison with our own. But this is beside the question. Every American lawyer might be, as Mr. M. O'Connell has it, a Lycurgus, and yet not owe it to his attorney breeding.

Whenever Mr. Field wishes to depreciate any contrivance or adaptation in society, he calls it anomalous. The "latens schematismus" remains latent to him. Instead of patiently dissecting and studying the working of that, as Lord Bacon recommends, and so learning to understand, qualify, and apply his general principles, he tries to knock it over with some crude, hard-dried principle or cant phrase from the minor political economists, such as "free competition," "laissez faire," and "monopoly." The words of the accurate and trustworthy M'Culloch, (so Mr. Field seems to qualify him), in his Dictionary, voce "Monopoly," condemn the exclusiveness of the great "legal guild:"—"Why, without any law of the realm empowering them, can it be right that a body of legal workmen, very high, indeed, in their incomes, but very small in their numbers, should have this abnormal power, and should alter the civil status of other classes of their fellow-subjects, and prescribe 10,000—or, taking all the proscribed classes, probably 20,000—other legal workmen from ever, all their lives, competing with them in the public law labour market for employment in advocacy? for, as I have said, their rules amount to a virtual proscription for life."

We did not know that the fact was so. We thought that the Bar was overstocked, and that the "inferior branch" of the legal tree bore the best crop of golden fruit, both as regards the averages and the monstrosities. Our notion of the average of barristers' incomes is 75*l.* a year, with from three to nine years' credit, and abundance of bad debts, implying more work than the pay represents; and our notion of a barrister's work is, that it is three times as hard as an attorney's in proportion to the pay. But taking Mr. Field's statement of the case, he himself may suggest the answer to his inquiry, why this is? He is a man of practice, has been brought up from hand to mouth, as attornies generally are brought up. The consequence is, that his legal mind is or ought to be practical, but certainly it is not comprehensive. He has snatched at principles, and torn them away to wither in his hands, instead of carefully tracing and taking up their roots for growth. His notions of symmetry and arrangement admit geometrical figures, and exclude the vital forms of nature. When the Patron of the Alphonsine tables had sufficiently puzzled himself with the Ptolemaic representation of the heavenly motions, he expressed an opinion, which would have been irreverent in the mouth of any mortal but a Castilian Hidalgo, that had he been consulted he could have given the Creator a better plan. Kepler, Galileo, and Newton, with far less arrogance, and infinitely more patience and sagacity, were content to investigate, and for their reward they discovered in the laws of the stars a simplicity and efficiency which the Alphonsine code might have failed to compass. The reason of the rule of which Mr. Field complains is not very difficult to see. The rule, as he points out, is not a relic of antiquity—something which has survived its cause and reason; it has grown up from the nature of things, and has been gradually shaped into its present form (not quite perfect, perhaps, but not to be improved by Mr. Field's chisel or rasp) under the watchful care of the most eminent judges and counsel. The object of the institution of the Bar is the conservation of the principles of the common law. This would be impossible in the hands of attornies. Their minds, like those of other mortals, are subdued to what they work in. Their views are necessarily concrete; it is desirable that they should be so. An attorney, with the habits of mind which distinguish an accomplished counsel, would be unfit for his work. Each by proper training is fitted for his occupation. The cases are exceptional where either branch of the Profession has been benefited by recruits from the other, and those recruits who have made good soldiers were drilled under the system Mr. Field would abolish. It is not worth while to stop to discriminate the intellectual characteristics which the two professions respectively require. There can be no doubt that of two minds, fresh from university training, and innocent of law or practice, one will be better fitted for the bar, the other for the office, and this independently of the gift of eloquence, which, though the most regarded, is, to the welfare of society, the least important gift. Suppose, however, that these blank minds are equally capable of winning distinction in either path—that both will inevitably distinguish themselves. It is easy, alas, to win distinction and wealth at the bar without discharging the sacred trust which is committed to the Bar—to make use of the law without understanding and consequently without respecting it. If our talented adventurer, after training for and trying attorney's work, is dissatisfied with the work, or with the pay, or with the distinction, and is free at once to jump into the position of a counsel—to become one of the keepers of the country's law, (a large part of its conscience)—what days and nights are we to expect that this man, who has shewn so little foresight, so little stability of character, will devote to the patient unremunerated investigation of the principles and worth of the law? "But don't tell me," says Mr. Field, "of the patient study of the law. Have I not seen note-books filled with caricatures—barristers who did not know the difference between a lease and an assignment?" No doubt the web of students and barristers is of as mixed a quality as that of articled clerks and attornies. But we are to consider those who succeed, not those who fail in each branch. A man of ability and energy, by one mode of training, may become a successful merchant, by another a successful attorney, by another a successful (and pernicious) Nisi Prius advocate. What is wanted for the lasting interests of society in the Bar is a man who has patiently studied that which is worthy of patient study and cannot be comprehended without it. The man may wear a wig and get money enough and honour enough—all he wants, without that study. Society demands more, and is wise and right in saying to the man of ability and energy, "If you wish to be trusted with this precious machine, which requires the undivided application of all your attention and industry for years to comprehend, you must give me security for that application—you must relinquish all other occupation." The man of energy, who, if he had a business, would neglect his books, being kept from business, is true to his character; he does not vegetate, but works to the desired end, and if the right stuff is in him becomes what he would never have become while on the attornies' roll.

The Parliamentary Remembrancer. Conducted by TOULMIN SMITH, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. [J. E. Taylor.]

THE nature and object of this useful publication will be best learned from the following explanations extracted from the prospectus:—

"It is proposed to issue in the ensuing and future sessions of Parliament a carefully-prepared summary under the above title, containing a clear statement of all the actual proceedings of Parliament, with explanatory notes, and an analysis of such bills as affect the practical action or interests of municipal bodies, local authorities, parishes, or associated companies of private enterprise.

"'The Parliamentary Remembrancer' will be issued every Saturday during the parliamentary session, and will convey information which is neither to be found in the newspaper press nor in the votes and proceedings of the House of Commons, but the supply of which is one of the greatest wants throughout the country, at a time when experimental legislation is continually bringing and threatening dangers to our most trusted institutions, to the stability and efficiency of sound local action, and to the property and safety of private enterprise.

"Highway bills, public health bills, burial bills, police bills, poor-law bills, charitable trusts bills, inclosure bills, new parishes bills, bills touching rates, rating, and municipal and local affairs, elections, and action generally, proceedings of the Board of Trade, Admiralty, Charity Commissioners, Ecclesiastical Commissioners, and many other measures and proceedings of these and analogous classes, are direct examples of cases where the want of an accurate knowledge from day to day among those concerned of what is doing in Parliament, and the impossibility which at present exists of the general public getting that knowledge, have been strongly felt, and have had very disastrous results. But there are, besides such obvious examples, numberless measures continually introduced which affect, indirectly as well as directly, the interests of municipal bodies, parishes, and public companies, but which fail to attract attention and due discussion, and lead to much mischief, simply because they are unobserved and unwatched. The uncertainty and changeableness in legislation which have so injuriously distinguished the last few years can only be explained by the want of knowledge, among those affected, of what was thus being done. . . . .

"'The Parliamentary Remembrancer' will be found of great assistance to members of Parliament, and to all who are interested, either directly or indirectly, in the progress of any branch of legislation, as well as to all those who are concerned in the results of that legislation.

"The size of 'The Parliamentary Remembrancer' will be foolscap folio, and it will be printed so as to be uniform in appearance with bills and other parliamentary proceedings.

"The subscription is one guinea for the session, (1857-8), to be paid in advance.

"'The Parliamentary Remembrancer' will be supplied only to subscribers. Subscribers' names and addresses, accompanied by a post-office order, or otherwise, for the amount of subscription, are requested to be sent to Mr. John E. Taylor, Printing Office, 10, Little Queen-street, Lincoln's-inn-fields, London, W.C."

The first number appeared on the 12th December. It relates to an uninteresting portion of the session. The following is the abstract of the business done on the 9th December:—

"Wednesday, 9th December.

"HOUSE OF LORDS.

"Bank Issues Indemnity Bill.—Brought from the Commons: read first time, to be read second time next day.

"Public Income and Expenditure—(as ordered on Friday last): account delivered.

"House of Commons.

"Pension to Sir H. Havelock.—Resolution of committee reported to the House, and agreed to.

"Supply.—Resolution of committee reported to the House, and agreed to: committee for Friday.

"Navy and Army.—Estimates ordered 'of the Charge for Naval Services,' and 'of the Charge for Army Services,' to the 31st March, 1859.

"Bank Issues Indemnity Bill.—Read third time: some verbal amendments made: passed.

> "The alteration made, though called 'verbal,' is highly important. It consists in the substitution, in the operative words of indemnity, of the words 'all acts necessary to the making of such issues,' in place of 'all acts done in relation to such issues.' The alteration confines the indemnity within precise limits. The original words were unprecise and vague, and made such a measure much more dangerous than, though dangerous under any circumstances, (see above), the limitation now introduced will leave it. The amendment is due to the care of Mr. Gladstone. But the Ministers did not oppose it. Alterations introduced into bills under the name of 'verbal amendments,' and therefore too often unheeded, are generally the most important, and often involve the whole principle of a measure.

"Sir Henry Havelock's Annuity Bill,—'to settle an Annuity on Sir Henry Havelock, Baronet, in consideration of his eminent Services:' brought in; read first time; to be read second time next day."

If Mr. Smith abstains from giving the publication an exclusively sectarian character, and reduces the subscription, which is too high, we have no doubt he will find that he has successfully undertaken to supply a real want.

REPORT of the DIRECTORS of the CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, presented at the Annual General Meeting, held at the Society's Office, No. 13, St. James's-square, London, FRIDAY, the 27th November, 1857.

It will be in the recollection of the Proprietors that at two Extraordinary General Meetings, held on the 1st and 28th January last, the period for holding the Annual Meetings was altered from March to November, in order that earlier publicity might be given to the state of the Society's affairs at the end of June, that being the period fixed by the Deed for the termination of each financial year. In consequence of this alteration no Meeting took place in March last, and it is therefore now the duty of the Directors to lay before this Meeting a statement of the transactions of the Society for the two years ending the 30th June, 1857.

The number of New Policies issued within that period was 1097;
The amount of Assurances granted was 605,300*l.*; and
The New Premiums arising therefrom amount to 20,729*l.* per annum.

The Assurance Fund, notwithstanding the payment in cash of 65,384*l.* as Bonus since the declaration in January, has increased during the two years by no less a sum than 55,676*l.*

From these facts it will be readily perceived that during the period under notice the progress of the Society has been in no degree retarded by the effects of the war, by the state of the money market, or by the active competition which has existed amongst kindred institutions.

After the full and comprehensive statements made at the Extraordinary Meeting in January last, when the SIXTH BONUS was declared, the Directors feel that there is little further now to communicate; but they cannot refrain from mentioning that the Bonus then divided, which averaged 46*l.* per cent. in Reversion, and 27*l.* per cent. in cash, on the Premiums received since 1851, has given general satisfaction, and has tended materially to sustain and advance the high estimation in which the Society has been so long held by the Public.

An Account of the Proceedings at the last BONUS MEETING, setting forth the Assets and Liabilities of the Society, and also the FAVOURABLE POSITION IN WHICH PERSONS WHO NOW ASSURE will be placed, can be obtained on application.

THE STATUTES

PASSED IN THE SESSION 1857—20 & 21 VICTORIA.

CAP. I.

An Act for the Amendment of the Cinque Ports Act. [26th June, 1857.]

Sect. 1. Sect. 5 of recited act not to apply to any district until her Majesty shall have granted a commission of the peace and a court of quarter sessions thereto.

Whereas by an act passed in the 18 & 19 Vict. [c. 48], intituled "An Act for the better Administration of Justice in the Cinque Ports," it was enacted, (by the 5th section), that from and after the granting of a charter of incorporation to certain parishes or places therein mentioned, amongst which was St. John the Baptist, (called Margate), or any one of them, or any part thereof, certain acts and portions of acts therein mentioned should be and the same were thereby repealed, so far as the same concerned or affected the part comprised in such charter, and that from and after the date of such charter no court of sessions to be holden for the town and port of Dover, nor any justices thereof, should have any jurisdiction or authority over or in respect of the district comprised in any such charter, and no such district should be liable to any rate, cess, or impost to which the same or the inhabitants thereof would, but for the now reciting act be liable as a member or liberty of Dover, save as thereinafter otherwise provided: and whereas the inhabitant householders of the town of Margate, being part of the said parish of St. John the Baptist, called Margate, have, in pursuance of the provisions of an act passed in the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. [c. 78], intituled "An Act to amend an Act for the Regulation of Municipal Corporations in England and Wales," petitioned her Majesty to grant a charter of incorporation to the inhabitants of the said town of Margate, within the limits defined in the schedule to an order of the General Board of Health, bearing date the 3rd July, 1851, whereby and by means of the Public Health Supplemental Act, 1851, No. 2, the Public Health Act was applied to the said town: and whereas notice of such petition, and of the time when the same was ordered by her Majesty to be taken into consideration by her Privy Council, was duly published in the London Gazette one month at least before such petition was considered, as hereinafter mentioned: and whereas her Majesty's said Privy Council did proceed to consider the said petition, and having fully considered it, have advised her Majesty to grant a charter of incorporation to the inhabitants of the said town of Margate, within the district set forth in the said order of the General Board of Health: and whereas, if such charter as aforesaid be granted, the provisions of the said recited act with respect to the district comprised in such charter will take effect, and thenceforward, and until the grant of a commission of the peace and quarter sessions of the peace for such district, inconveniences may arise unless the said recited act be amended: and whereas it is expedient that the said recited act should be amended: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. The provisions contained in the 5th section of the said recited act shall not apply or have any effect with reference to any district comprised within any charter of incorporation to be granted to any parish or place mentioned in the said act, or any part thereof, unless and until her Majesty shall have granted a commission of the peace and a court of quarter sessions for the district comprised in any such charter, but on the grant of a commission of the peace and court of quarter sessions to any such district the said provisions contained in sect. 5 of the said recited act shall thereupon take effect and come into force with respect to such district.

CAP. II.

An Act to enable Her Majesty to settle an Annuity on her Royal Highness the Princess Royal. [26th June, 1857.]

Sect. 1. Power to her Majesty to grant an annuity of 8000*l.* to her Royal Highness the Princess Royal for her life.

CAP. III.

An Act to amend the Act of the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Years of her Majesty, to substitute in certain Cases other Punishment in lieu of Transportation. [26th June, 1857.]

Sect. 1. Sects. 1, 2, 3, and 4 of recited act repealed.
2. Sentence of transportation abolished, and sentence of penal servitude substituted.
3. Provisions of acts concerning transported offenders to apply to offenders under sentence of penal servitude.
4. Existing power to appoint places of transportation to be applicable for the purposes of this act.
5. Magistrates may recommit convicts, whose licenses are revoked, to penal servitude in any convict prison.
6. All enactments referring to transportation to have reference to penal servitude.
7. Recited act and this act to be read as one.
8. Commencement of act.

Whereas an act was passed in the session holden in the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 99, to substitute in certain cases other punishment in lieu of transportation, and it is expedient that such act should be amended; be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. Sects. 1, 2, 3, and 4 of the said act shall be repealed.

2. After the commencement of this act no person shall be sentenced to transportation; and any person who, if this act and the said act had not been passed, might have been sentenced to transportation, shall, after the commencement of this act, be liable to be sentenced to be kept in penal servitude for a term of the same duration as the term of transportation to which such person would have been liable if the said act and this act had not been passed; and in every case where, at the discretion of the court, one of any two or more terms of transportation might have been awarded, the court shall have the like discretion to award one of any two or more of the terms of penal servitude which are hereby authorised to be awarded instead of such terms of transportation: provided always, that any person who might at the discretion of the court have been sentenced either to transportation for any term or to any period of imprisonment, shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be sentenced either to penal servitude for the same term or to the same period of imprisonment; and in any case in which before the passing of the said act sentence of seven years' transportation might have been passed, it shall be lawful for the court in its discretion to pass a sentence of penal servitude of not less than three years.

3. And whereas the provisions applicable to persons under sentence of transportation extend to persons under sentence of penal servitude conveyed to parts beyond the seas in those cases only where they are conveyed to and kept in places of confinement appointed under the said act or the act of the 5 Geo. 4, c. 84, and it is expedient to extend the said provisions to other cases:

Any person now or hereafter under sentence or order of penal servitude may, during the term of the sentence or order, be conveyed to any place or places beyond the seas to which offenders under sentence or order of transportation may be conveyed, or to any place or places beyond the seas which may be hereafter appointed as herein mentioned; and all acts and provisions now applicable to and for the removal and transportation of offenders under sentence or order of transportation to and from any places beyond the seas, and concerning their custody, management, and control, and the property in their services, and the punishment of such offenders if at large without lawful cause before the expiration of their sentence, and all other provisions now applicable to and in the case of persons under sentence or order of transportation, shall apply to and in the case of persons under sentence or order of penal servitude, as if they were persons under sentence or order of transportation.

4. The provisions and powers of the said act of the 5 Geo. 4, authorising the appointment (by her Majesty, with the advice of her Privy Council) of any place or places beyond the seas to which felons and other offenders under sentence or order of transportation shall be conveyed, and all other powers of her Majesty, or the lord-lieutenant or chief governor or governors of Ireland, for the like purpose, shall extend and be applicable to and for the appointment of any place or places beyond the seas to which offenders under sentence or order of penal servitude may be conveyed, as herein provided.

5. And whereas by the said act of the 16 & 17 Vict. it is provided, that any convict whose license is revoked shall be recommitted to the prison or place of confinement from which he was released by virtue of the said license: be it enacted, that from and after the passing of this act any such convict may be recommitted by the magistrate issuing his warrant in that behalf, either to the prison from which he was released by virtue of his license, or to any other prison in which convicts under sentence of penal servitude may be lawfully confined.

6. Where, in any enactment now in force, the expression "any crime punishable with transportation," or "any crime punishable by law with transportation," or any expression of the like import, is used, the enactment shall be construed and take effect as applicable also to any crime punishable with penal servitude.

7. The said act of the 16 & 17 Vict. and this act shall be read and construed together as one act.

8. This act shall commence on the 1st July, 1857.

3. Procedure in error shall be uniform. No error to be brought in cases in which error cannot now be brought.
4. Power to make general orders.

Whereas by an act of the session of the Parliament of Ireland holden in the 40 Geo. 3, c. 39, writs of error upon judgments of the superior courts of law in Ireland were made returnable in the court thereby constituted, and since commonly called the Court of Exchequer Chamber, and the chief justices, chief barons, and the rest of the justices and barons, or any nine of them assembled in the said court, were empowered to examine and affirm or reverse such judgments: and whereas by an act of the session of Parliament holden in the 1 Geo. 4, c. 68, increased powers were given to the said Court of Exchequer Chamber: and whereas by the Common-law Procedure Amendment Act, (Ireland), 1853, and the Common-law Procedure Amendment Act, (Ireland), 1856, further provision was made for the bringing of error and appeals into the said Court of Exchequer Chamber: and whereas it is expedient that the procedure in error in the said court should be rendered uniform, and that all proceedings in error and upon appeals brought into the said court on judgments and other proceedings of any of the Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer should be before the justices only, or the justices and barons only, as the case may be, of the two other of the said last-mentioned courts: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. In all cases in which error or an appeal shall, after the passing of this act, be brought into the said Court of Exchequer Chamber upon any judgment or other proceeding of any of the Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, or Exchequer, the proceedings in the said Court of Exchequer Chamber in error, or upon such appeal, shall be before the chief justices and justices only, or chief justice and justices, chief baron and barons only, as the case may be, of the two other of the said courts, or any six or more of them.

2. Nothing in this act contained shall in any way affect the power or jurisdiction of either of the chief justices or the chief baron to fix the sittings of the said court, or (save in proceedings in error or upon appeal, to which the last preceding section shall apply) to do any other thing in or relating to the said court.

3. In order that the procedure in error in the said Court of Exchequer Chamber upon all judgments and proceedings of the superior courts of law may be rendered, so far as possible, uniform, the enactments of the Common-law Procedure Amendment Act, (Ireland), 1853, with respect to the bringing of error into the said Court of Exchequer Chamber, and the rules and orders made or to be made in pursuance of the said act, shall extend to and include the bringing of error in the said Court of Exchequer Chamber upon all judgments and proceedings of the Court of Chancery as a court of law, of the Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, as well in Crown as in all other cases in which error upon such judgments or proceedings may now be brought in the said Court of Exchequer Chamber; and the procedure in error in the said Court of Exchequer Chamber, and the proceedings consequent thereon, shall, so far as practicable, in all such cases be pursuant to the said Common-law Procedure Amendment Act, (Ireland), 1853, and the said rules made or to be made under the said act: provided, that nothing in this act contained shall be construed to enable error to be brought in cases in which error cannot now be brought: provided also, that where any fiat or consent is now required in any proceeding in error, such fiat or consent shall continue to be required in the corresponding proceeding in error under this act.

4. The power to make general orders for the said Court of Exchequer Chamber, under sect. 233 of the Common-law Procedure Amendment Act, (Ireland), 1853, shall extend to all proceedings in error in the said court.

Whereas it is provided by the act of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 69, that any ecclesiastical corporation sole may dispose of, by way of absolute sale, or in exchange for any messuages, lands, or other hereditaments, any lands or buildings for the purpose of the same being used as or converted into a workhouse, or of being occupied with a workhouse, or for any other purpose relating to the relief of the poor which the Poor-law Commissioners might approve of, and to convey the same, and the fee-simple and inheritance thereof, unto the guardians of any union or parish, or their successors, and to accept from and give to such guardians any monies by way of equality of exchange: and whereas difficulty has arisen in carrying this provision into execution where the person who constitutes any ecclesiastical corporation sole is insane, and it is expedient to provide a remedy in such cases: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. If the guardians of any union or parish, or the managers of any school district, shall be desirous of purchasing or of exchanging, for the purposes mentioned in the said act, or in any act incorporated therewith, or extending or explaining the same, any land or building belonging to any ecclesiastical corporation sole, and the person for the time being entitled to such land or building by virtue of his office shall be found, upon a commission issued by the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as in the act of the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 70, to be insane, it shall be competent for such guardians or managers to petition the said Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, for leave to purchase or exchange any such land or buildings so belonging to such corporation sole, and upon such petition the said Lord Chancellor may make such order as shall seem to him to be proper; and if he shall see fit to authorise the sale or exchange of any land or building, the same shall, on behalf of such corporation sole, be conveyed to or received in exchange from such guardians or managers, as the case may be, (with the consent of the ordinary having jurisdiction over such corporation sole, and with such further consents, if necessary, as are hereinafter mentioned), by such person as the said Lord Chancellor shall by order appoint, and the purchase money, or the money to be received for equality of exchange on behalf of such corporation sole, shall (except as hereinafter mentioned) be paid into the Bank of England, in the name and with the privity of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, to be placed to his account to the credit of the said corporation sole, and thenceforth all proceedings authorised by the 2nd section of the said hereinbefore first-mentioned act shall be applicable to such sum of money paid to the account of the Accountant-General.

2. Provided nevertheless, that if the said corporation sole shall be the incumbent of any benefice, the consent of the patron of the said benefice shall be necessary to perfect and complete such sale or exchange as aforesaid; and if the said land or building so to be sold or exchanged as aforesaid, or any part thereof, shall have been purchased by the governors of the bounty of Queen Anne for the augmentation of the maintenance of the poor clergy, or have been otherwise appropriated or annexed, by or with the consent, concurrence, or direction of the said governors, to the said benefice for the augmentation thereof, the consent of the said governors shall be necessary to perfect and complete such sale or exchange as aforesaid; and in either of such cases the said purchase money, or the money to be received for equality of exchange as aforesaid, shall be paid to the said governors, and the receipt of the treasurer for the time being of the said governors shall be sufficient discharge for the said monies, or for so much thereof as in such receipt shall be expressed to be received; and all the monies to arise from such purchase or exchange as aforesaid shall (subject to any stipulation or agreement which the said governors in their discretion may think proper to make for payment thereout of the costs and expenses of such sale or exchange) be appropriated by the said governors to the particular benefice to which the said land or building comprised in such sale or exchange shall have previously belonged, and shall be applicable and disposable by them, for the benefit and augmentation of such benefice, in such and the same manner, and with such and the same powers of investment, and other powers or authorities in all respects, according to the rules and regulations of the said governors for the time being, as if the said monies, or the stocks or funds which might be purchased therewith, were then originally appropriated by the said governors to such benefice out of the general funds and profits of the said governors or otherwise for the benefit and augmentation thereof.

3. Until the said purchase money, or the money so to be paid for equality of exchange as aforesaid, shall have been reinvested in the purchase of land, tithes, or other hereditaments for the benefit of the said corporation sole, the interest, dividends, or annual income from time to time accruing thereon shall be applied in like manner as the rents and profits of the land or building so purchased or exchanged would have been applicable if the same land or building had not been purchased or exchanged; and the said Lord Chancellor may make such order or orders from time to time as may be requisite for the purpose of such application.

4. The consent of the said ordinary, patron, and governors hereby required shall be testified by the said ordinary, patron, and governors respectively executing the deed or other assurance by which the land or building sold or exchanged shall be conveyed or assured, except that in the case of any land or building of copyhold or customary tenure which shall be conveyed or assured by surrender, such consent shall be testified by any writing under the corporate seal, or the hand and seal, as the case may be, of each of the consenting parties, which writing, if produced to the lord or steward of the manor of which the said land or building shall be holden, shall be a sufficient authority to such lord or steward for accepting from the person so appointed or ordered to convey as aforesaid a surrender of the same land and building, and such writing shall be entered, with the surrender, upon the court-rolls of the said manor.

5. In any case where, upon the sale of any such land or building as aforesaid belonging to any benefice, the patronage of the said benefice shall be in the Crown, or the advowson and right of patronage of such benefice shall be part of the possessions of the duchy of Cornwall, or the patron of such benefice shall be a minor, idiot, lunatic, or feme covert, the consent required by this act on the part of the patron of such benefice shall be testified by the execution of such deed or assurance or other writing as aforesaid by such and the same persons as by the act of Parliament passed in the session holden in the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 23, intituled "An Act to amend the Law for providing fit Houses for the Beneficed Clergy," are in like cases directed or authorised to testify the consent of the patron to the exercise of the several powers given by the said last-mentioned act, or by certain other acts therein mentioned or referred to, and in all other cases the consent required by this act on the part of the patron of any benefice shall be given by the person or persons who would be entitled to present, nominate, or collate to such benefice in case the same were actually vacant at the time of giving such consent.

6. In the construction of this act the word "benefice" shall be taken to extend to and comprise all rectories with cure of souls, vicarages, perpetual curacies, and chapelries, the incumbents of which respectively shall in right thereof be corporations sole.

7. The provisions of the act of the 1 Vict. c. 50, shall be applicable to this act, and the several terms herein used shall be construed as in the 109th section of the act of the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, and as in the act of the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 70, respectively.

Preliminary.

Sect. 1. This act may be cited for all purposes as "The Joint-stock Companies Act, 1857."

2. "The Joint-stock Companies Act, 1856," hereinafter called "the principal act," and this act, shall, so far as is consistent with the context and objects of such acts, be construed as one act; and this act and the principal act may be cited together for all purposes as "The Joint-stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857."

Registry, (Part 1 of Principal Act).

3. The 4th section of the principal act shall be repealed, and in lieu thereof be it enacted as follows:—

If after the passing of this act more than twenty persons carry on, in partnership, any trade or business, having for its object the procurement of gain to the partnership, then, unless such persons are included within one or more of the classes following, (that is say),

(1). Are registered as a company under the principal act;

(3). Are engaged in working mines within, and subject to the jurisdiction of, the Stannaries;

Each one of the persons so carrying on business in partnership together contrary to this provision shall be severally liable for the payment of the whole debts of the partnership, and may be sued for the same without the joinder in the action or suit of any other member of the partnership.

4. The registrar shall, on payment of 5*s*., issue a certificate of incorporation of any company to any person applying for the same, and such certificate shall be admissible in evidence in like manner as the certificate of incorporation directed to be given by the principal act.

Register of Shareholders, (Part 1 of Principal Act).

5. Any limited company may by special resolution convert into stock any shares which have been fully paid up; and upon such conversion being made all the provisions of the principal act, or of this act, which require or imply that the capital of the company is divided into shares of any fixed amount, and distinguished by numbers, and all the provisions of the principal act that require the company to keep a register of shareholders, or to make an annual list of shareholders in the register, shall cease as to so much of the capital as has been so converted into stock.

6. Any company that has converted any portion of its capital into stock shall give notice of such conversion, specifying the shares so converted, to the registrar of joint-stock companies, within fifteen days from the date of the last of the meetings at which the resolution was passed by which such conversion was authorised, and the registrar shall forthwith record the fact of such conversion. If such notice is not given within the period aforesaid, the company shall incur a penalty not exceeding 5*l.* for every day during which such neglect to give notice continues.

7. Any company that has converted any portion of its capital into stock shall keep at the registered office of the company a register of the names and addresses of the persons for the time being entitled to such stock, and such register shall be open to inspection in the manner and subject to the penalties in and subject to which the register of shareholders is by the principal act directed to be kept open.

9. The court may, in any proceeding under the 25th section of the principal act, decide on any question relating to the title of any person who is a party to such proceeding to have his name entered in or erased from the register, whether such question arises between two or more holders or alleged holders of shares or stock, or between any holders or alleged holders of shares or stock and the company, and generally the court may in any such proceeding decide any question that it may be necessary or expedient to decide for the rectification of the register.

10. If any company makes default in forwarding copies of the memorandum of association and articles of association to shareholders, in pursuance of sect. 27 of the principal act, the company so making default shall for each offence incur a penalty not exceeding 1*l.*

Winding up by Court, (Part 3 of Principal Act).

11. Where an order has been made for winding up a company under the third part of the principal act, if, upon the application of the official liquidator, it appears to the court having jurisdiction in the matter of such winding up that there is probable cause for believing that any contributory to such company is about to quit the United Kingdom, or otherwise abscond, or to remove or conceal any of his goods or chattels, for the purpose of evading payment of calls, or for avoiding examination in respect of the affairs of the company, the court may, by warrant directed to such person or persons as it thinks fit, cause such contributory to be arrested, and his books, papers, monies, securities for monies, goods and chattels, to be seized, and him and them to be safely kept until such time as the court may order.

12. Any contributory who has been arrested, or whose goods or chattels have been seized under any such warrant as aforesaid, may, at any time after such arrest or seizure, apply to the court that issued the warrant to discharge him from custody, or to direct the delivery to him of any books, papers, monies, securities for money, goods or chattels, that may have been seized; and the court shall take such application into consideration, and shall make such order thereon as it thinks just.

13. All calls that are authorised by the third part of the principal act to be made on a contributory, in the event of the company to which he belongs being wound up by the court or voluntarily, shall be deemed in England and Ireland to be specialty debts due from such contributory to the company.

Official Liquidators, (Part 3 of Principal Act).

14. In cases within the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery in England or Ireland, or of the Court of Session in Scotland, or of the Court of the Stannaries, the court having jurisdiction shall, in the appointment of an official liquidator or official liquidators, consult the interests of both the creditors and contributories, and hear such creditors or contributories as it thinks fit to hear with respect to such appointment. It may, unless both the creditors and contributories concur in the appointment of a single liquidator, appoint one or more liquidator or liquidators to act on behalf of each of such parties. It may declare, that in case of difference, any act may be done by a majority of liquidators, or it may require the liquidators, in all cases of difference, to apply to the court. It may do anything hereby authorised to be done, either upon the first appointment of a liquidator, or at any subsequent stage of the winding up; but notwithstanding anything herein contained, it shall not be obligatory on the court to appoint more than one liquidator, if, in its discretion, it thinks that such appointment will be most conducive to justice.

15. In cases within the jurisdiction of any Court of Bankruptcy the official assignee shall, where a liquidator is appointed by the creditors, be considered as appointed as the representative of the contributories, and, where a liquidator is appointed by the contributories, be considered as appointed as the representative of the creditors.

16. The power of compromising debts and claims given by the principal act to the liquidators therein mentioned shall be deemed to extend to the compromise of any calls or debts due from any contributory or alleged contributory to the company on receipt of a smaller sum in lieu of a greater, or upon such terms as may be agreed upon, with power to the liquidators to take any security for any calls or debts so due, and to give effectual discharges on completion of such compromise; subject to this proviso, that no such compromise shall be made by any official liquidator except with the sanction of the court, and after giving such notice to creditors, and subject to such conditions as to obtaining the consent of creditors, or any portion of them, as the court may direct, and that no such compromise shall be made by the liquidators appointed on the voluntary winding up of a company, except with the sanction of a special resolution.

17. Where a company is being wound up voluntarily, and the whole or a portion of its property is about to be sold to another company, registered under this act, the liquidators of the first-mentioned company may, with the sanction of a special resolution of the company by whom they were appointed, receive, in compensation or part compensation for such sale, shares in such other company, for the purpose of distribution amongst the shareholders of the company being wound up, or may enter into any other arrangement whereby the shareholders of the company being wound up may, in lieu of receiving cash or shares, or in addition thereto, participate in the profits of or receive any other benefit from the purchasing company; and any sale made or arrangement entered into by the liquidators in pursuance of this section shall be binding on the shareholders of the company being wound up; subject to this proviso, that if any shareholder in the company being wound up, who has not voted in favour of the special resolution passed by his company at either of the meetings held for passing the same, expresses his dissent from any such special resolution, in writing addressed to the liquidators or one of them, and left at the registered office of the company, not later than seven days after the date of the last of the meetings at which such special resolution was passed, such dissentient shareholder may require the liquidators to do such one of the following things as they may prefer; that is to say, either to abstain from carrying such resolution into effect, or to purchase the shares held by the dissentient shareholders or shareholder, at such price as may be agreed upon or settled by arbitration, such purchase money to be paid before the company is dissolved, and to be raised by the liquidators in such manner as may be determined by special resolution.

18. In the case of a company being wound up voluntarily, the liquidators may from time to time during the continuance of such winding up, summon general meetings of the company for the purpose of obtaining the sanction of the company by a special resolution, or for such other purposes as they think fit.

19. Where a company is in course of being wound up voluntarily, and proceedings are taken for the purpose of having the same wound up by the court, the court may, if it thinks fit, notwithstanding that it makes an order directing the company to be wound up by the court, provide in such order, or in any other order, for the adoption of all or any of the proceedings taken in the course of the voluntary winding up: it may also, instead of making an order that the company should be altogether wound up by the court, direct that the voluntary winding up should continue, but subject to such supervision of the court, and with such liberty for creditors, contributories, or others to apply to the court, and generally upon such terms and subject to such conditions as the court thinks just.

20. If the liquidators make default in reporting to the registrar, in the case of a company being wound up by the court, the decree declaring the company to be dissolved, and in the case of a company being wound up voluntarily, the resolution declaring the company to have been fairly wound up, they shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding 5*l.* for every day during which they are so in default, and moreover shall not, while so in default, be entitled to recover any compensation for their services as liquidators.

21. If at the expiration of twelve months from the date of the dissolution of any company that has been wound up there remain in the hands of the liquidators any money, shares, or other property which they have been unable, by reason of the absence or death of any persons entitled thereto, or for any other reason, to distribute amongst the parties so entitled, the liquidators shall be deemed to be trustees of such monies, shares, or other property, within the meaning of an act passed in the 11 Vict. c. 96, and intituled "An Act for better securing Trust Funds, and for the Relief of Trustees," and of any act amending the same, and may pay or transfer such monies, shares, or other property into the Court of Chancery accordingly.

Alteration of Forms, (Part 3 of Principal Act).

22. No alteration made by the Board of Trade in the table marked B. contained in the schedule to the principal act shall affect any company registered prior to the date of such alteration, or repeal as respects such company any portion of such table, unless such alteration is adopted by special resolution.

Repeal, (Part 5 of Principal Act).

23. The 107th section of the principal act shall be repealed, and in lieu thereof be it enacted, that—

(1.) An act passed in the 8 Vict. c. 110, and intituled "An Act for the Registration, Incorporation, and Regulation of Joint-stock Companies;" and

(2.) An act passed in the 11 Vict. c. 78, intituled "An Act to amend an Act for the Registration, Incorporation, and Regulation of Joint-stock Companies;" and shall be deemed to have been and still to remain unrepealed as to any company completely registered which has not obtained registration under the principal act, until such time as such company obtains registration under the Joint-stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, but from and after such time, and not before, shall be repealed as to such last-mentioned company; and, subject as aforesaid, all the acts mentioned in this section shall be repealed.

Costs by Limited Companies.

24. Where a limited company is plaintiff or pursuer in any action, suit, or other legal proceeding, any judge having jurisdiction in the matter may, if it be proved to his satisfaction that there is reason to believe that if the defendant be successful in his defence the assets of the company will be insufficient to pay his costs, require sufficient security to be given for such costs, and may stay all proceedings until such security be given.

Temporary Provisions, (Part 5 of Principal Act).

25. Where any company completely registered under the said act passed in the 8 Vict. c. 110, has obtained registration under the principal act after the 3rd November, 1856, but before the passing of this act, such registration shall be as effectual to all intents as if it had taken place on or before the said 3rd November, 1856.

26. The 110th section of the principal act shall be repealed.

27. Every company completely registered under the said act of the 8 Vict. c. 110, including any company that has obtained a certificate of complete registration under the Limited Liability Act, 1855, but excluding any company formed for the purpose of insurance, shall, if it has not already registered under the principal act, register under the Joint-stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, on or before the 2nd November, 1857, or incur such penalty as is hereinafter mentioned.

28. If any company hereby required to register under the Joint-stock Companies Acts makes default in registering on or before the said 2nd November, 1857, then from and after such day until the day on which such company is registered under the Joint-stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, the following consequences shall ensue, (that is to say)—

(1). The company shall be incapable of suing either at law or in equity, but shall not be incapable of being made a defendant to a suit either at law or in equity:

(2). No dividend shall be payable:

(3). Each director or manager of the company shall for each day during which the company is in default incur a penalty of 5*l.*, and such penalty may be recovered by any person, and be applied by him to his own use.

Nevertheless such default shall not render the company so being in default illegal, nor subject it to any penalty or disability other than as specified in this section.

29. Every company consisting of seven or more shareholders, having a capital of fixed amount, divided into shares, also of fixed amount, duly constituted by law prior to the passing of this act, and not being a company hereby required to be registered, may at any time hereafter, upon compliance with the provisions of the Joint-stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, register itself as a company under such acts, with or without limited liability; subject to this proviso, that no company shall be registered as a limited company unless either the liability of the shareholders is already limited to the amount of the unpaid calls on their shares, or an assent to its being so registered has been given by three-fourths in number and value of such of its shareholders as may have been present, personally, or by proxy, in cases where proxies are allowed by the regulations of the company, at some general meeting summoned for that purpose.

30. Where an existing company, authorised to register under the Joint-stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, has had the whole or any portion of its capital converted into stock, such company shall, as to the capital so converted, instead of delivering to the registrar the statement of capital and shares required by the principal act, deliver to the registrar a statement of the amount of stock belonging to the company, and the names of the persons who were holders of such stock on some day to be named in the statement, not more than six days before the day of registration.

31. The list of shareholders required by sect. 111 of the principal act to be delivered to the registrar need not be made up to the day of the registration of the company, but may be made up to any day not more than six days before such day of registration.

32. No fees shall be charged in respect of the registration under the Joint-stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, of any company existing at the date of this act, and required or authorised to be registered by the said Joint-stock Companies Acts, or either of them, in cases where such company is not registered as a limited company, or where, previously to its being registered as a limited company, the liability of the shareholders was limited by some other act of Parliament or by letters-patent.

33. The 113th section of the principal act shall be repealed, and in lieu thereof be it enacted as follows:—Upon compliance with the requisitions of the Joint-stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, respecting registration, the registrar of joint-stock companies shall certify under his hand that the company applying for registration is incorporated as a company under the Joint-stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, and in the case of a limited company that it is limited, and thereupon such company shall be incorporated accordingly; and all provisions contained in any act of Parliament, deed of settlement, letters-patent, or other instrument constituting or regulating any company that has been registered under the provisions of the said 113th section, or any company that may hereafter be registered under this section, shall be deemed to be regulations of the company, in the same manner as if they were contained in a registered memorandum of association and articles of association; and all the provisions of the Joint-stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, shall apply to such company, in the same manner in all respects as if it had been originally incorporated under such acts, subject to the reservation in favour of creditors contained in the principal act, and to the following provisoes:—

(1). That Table B. shall not, unless adopted by special resolution, apply to any such company as is mentioned in this section:

(2). That no company shall have power to alter any provision contained in any act of Parliament relating to the company:

(3). That no company shall have power, without the sanction of the Board of Trade, to alter any provision contained in any letters-patent relating to the company:

(4). That nothing herein contained shall authorise any company to alter any such provisions contained in any deed of settlement, letters-patent, or other instrument constituting or regulating the company, as would, if such company had originally been incorporated under the Joint-stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, have been contained in the memorandum of association, and are not authorised to be altered by such last-mentioned acts:

But nothing herein contained shall derogate from any power of altering its constitution or regulations which may be vested in any existing company by virtue of any such act of Parliament, deed of settlement, letters-patent, or other instrument constituting or regulating the company: moreover the repeal of the said 113th section of the principal act shall not affect any right acquired under the section so repealed.

8. It shall be competent to the heir, who shall have been served by general or special service, or to the general disponee of any party who shall have died fully vested in right of any such lease or assignation in security, recorded as aforesaid, to expede a notarial instrument, in the form as nearly as may be of the Schedule (F.) to this act annexed; and the recording of such instrument in the register in which such lease is recorded shall complete the title of such heir or disponee to such lease or assignation in security.

10. When an adjudication of any such lease or assignation in security recorded as aforesaid shall have been obtained against the party vested in the right thereof respectively, or against the heir of such party, the recording of the abbreviate of adjudication in the register in which the lease is recorded shall complete the right of the adjudger to such lease or assignation in security.

11. It shall be lawful for the trustee on the sequestrated estate of any party, in right of any such lease or assignation in security as aforesaid, to expede a notarial instrument, in the form as nearly as may be of the Schedule (F.) to this act annexed; and the recording of such instrument in the register in which such lease is recorded shall complete the right of such trustee to such lease or assignation in security.

On the production to the keeper of the register of a renunciation of any such lease as aforesaid recorded therein, or of a discharge of any such assignation in security as aforesaid therein recorded, by or on behalf of the party appearing on the register as in right of such lease or assignation in security, which renunciation or discharge may be in the form of the Schedules (G.) and (H.) respectively to this act annexed, and may be indorsed on such lease or assignation in security, he shall forthwith duly record the same.

14. On the production to any such keeper of an extract of a decree of reduction of any such lease, assignation, assignation in security, translation, adjudication, instrument, discharge, or renunciation recorded in the register of which he is the keeper, he shall forthwith duly record the same.

Leases, assignations, assignations in security, translations, adjudications, instruments, discharges, renunciations, and other writs, duly presented for registration in pursuance of this act, shall be forthwith shortly entered in the minute-book of the register in common form, and shall, with all due despatch, be fully registered in the register-book, and thereafter redelivered to the parties, with certificates of due registration thereon, which shall be probative of such registration, such certificates specifying the date of presentation, and the book and folio in which the ingrossment has been made, and being subscribed by the keeper of the register; and the date of entry in the minute-book shall be held to be the date of registration; and extracts of all such writs registered in pursuance of this act shall make faith in all cases in like manner as the writs registered, except where the writs so registered are offered to be improven.

16. The registration of all such leases, assignations, assignations in security, translations, adjudications, writs of acknowledgment, and notarial instruments as aforesaid, in manner herein provided, shall complete the right under the same respectively, to the effect of establishing a preference in virtue thereof, as effectually as if the grantee, or party in his right, had entered into the actual possession of the subjects leased under such writs respectively at the date of registration thereof.

17. Leases containing an obligation upon the grantor to renew the same from time to time at fixed periods, or upon the termination of a life or lives, or otherwise, shall be deemed leases within the meaning of this act, and registerable as such, provided such leases shall by the terms of such obligation be renewable from time to time, so as to endure for a period of thirty-one years or upwards.

18. No lease of lands and heritages other than subjects held by burgage tenure executed after the passing of this act, unless where the same shall have been executed in terms of an obligation to renew contained in a lease renewable as aforesaid, and of date prior to this act, shall be held to fall within the same, or to be registerable thereunder, unless the name of the lands of which the subjects let consist or form a part shall be set forth in such lease; and no such lease of such lands and heritages as aforesaid, except where the same consist of mines or minerals, shall be held to fall within this act, or to be registerable thereunder, unless the extent of the land let shall be set forth in such lease, and shall not exceed fifty acres.

19. Where any such lease as aforesaid registerable under this act shall, before the passing thereof, have been recorded in the books of council and session, or in the books of any sheriff or burgh court, the production to the keeper of the register of an extract of such lease shall be a sufficient warrant for him to record the same, and he shall thereupon duly record it, and the recording thereof shall be as valid and effectual as if the original lease had been presented to him.

20. Whereas it is expedient that the Acts for the Inclosure, Exchange, and Improvement of Land should be further amended and extended: be it enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. In any case of inclosure in which it shall appear to the Inclosure Commissioners of England and Wales to be unnecessary that all or any of the allotments to be made under the award of the valuer acting in the matter of such inclosure should be fenced, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, by an order under their hands and seal, if they shall see fit to dispense with the erection of boundary and other fences, to direct that such allotments, or any of them, shall be distinguished by metes and bounds: provided nevertheless, that any person interested in an allotment may at any time fence the same at his own expense.

2. So long as any of such allotments remain unfenced, the same shall be subject to the provisions of the said acts relating to regulated pastures, in such manner as the valuer, with the approbation of the said commissioners, shall by his award direct; and the owners thereof shall enjoy all such rights of common, by reason of vicinage, as they were entitled to prior to the setting out of such allotments.

3. Where, by the said acts, notice is required to be given to any designated person, or any claim is required to be delivered to the valuer in the matter of any inclosure, such notice may be given, or claim delivered, either by sending it by the post in a registered letter, or by leaving it at the office or usual place of abode of such person or valuer respectively.

4. For the purpose of removing all doubts as to the power of companies incorporated by special act of Parliament for the making and maintaining of any railway, canal, docks, harbour, waterworks, or other work, to exchange land belonging to such companies under the provisions of the said acts, be it declared and enacted, that every such company shall be deemed to be a person interested within the meaning of the Acts for the Inclosure, Exchange, and Improvement of Land, for the purpose of exchanging land belonging to the said company, and that notwithstanding the provisions in any act of Parliament relating to such company specially limiting the purposes to which such land belonging to the said company shall be applicable.

5. In case any person interested according to the definition contained in the 16th section of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 118, shall apply to the Inclosure Commissioners for an order of exchange of any land in which her Majesty, her heirs or successors, have any estate or interest in right of the Crown, in reversion or remainder expectant upon the determination of any estate for life, or other larger interest, it shall be lawful for the Inclosure Commissioners to make such order of exchange, if they shall so think fit, provided that the consent of her Majesty, her heirs or successors, shall have been previously signified thereto by some writing under the hand of one of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Woods, Forests, and Land Revenues; and every such order of exchange which shall be made with such consent shall be valid and effectual, to all intents and purposes whatsoever, and shall be binding upon her Majesty, her heirs and successors, and a duplicate thereof shall in every case be deposited in the office of land revenue records and inrolments: provided always, that in case any such order shall, previously to the passing of this act, have been made upon the application of any person as above mentioned, with the said consent previously signified as aforesaid, every such order shall be as valid and effectual, and be in like manner binding upon her Majesty, her heirs and successors, as if the said consent had been given under the provisions of this act.

7. Where any land of which a partition is proposed to be made under the said acts, or any of them, cannot in the opinion of the valuer or commissioners (as the case may be) be conveniently allotted in severalty in parts or shares of the like proportional values as the undivided parts or shares in respect whereof the partition is proposed to be made, the difference in such proportional values may be compensated by a perpetual rent-charge of such amount, or perpetual rent-charges of such aggregate amount, as in the opinion of the valuer or commissioners (as the case may require) will be just, to be charged on the land or respective lands for the excess in value whereof the same is or are intended as an equivalent or equivalents, or upon such part or respective parts of such land or lands as may appear to the valuer or commissioners (as the case may require) to afford sufficient security for such rent-charge or rent-charges respectively.

8. Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall extend to authorise any exchange or partition, or the creation of any such rent-charge as aforesaid, where in the opinion of the valuer or commissioners (as the case may be) the deficiency in value of any land or other hereditaments which would require to be compensated as aforesaid exceeds one-eighth part of the actual value thereof.

9. The amount of the rent-charge or respective amounts of the rent-charges (as the case may be) to be created under this act, on any such exchange or partition as aforesaid, and the land or lands to be charged therewith, shall respectively be fixed and determined by the inclosure award or order of exchange or partition, (as the case may require).

10. Every such rent-charge shall be a valid and indefeasible charge upon the land charged therewith by the confirmed inclosure award or the confirmed order of exchange or partition, (as the case may be), subject only to tithe rent-charges, land tax, local rates and taxes, quit or chief rents incidental to tenure, and charges created or to be created under any act authorising advances of public or private money for drainage or the improvement of lands, and prior to all other charges whatsoever, and shall be recoverable in the same manner as a tithe rent-charge charged under the act of the session holden in the 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 71, for the commutation of tithes in England and Wales.

11. Every rent-charge created under this act shall be and enure to, for, and upon the same uses, trusts, intents, and purposes, and be subject to the same conditions, charges, and incumbrances, as the land or hereditaments in respect of the deficiency in value whereof such rent-charge is made payable will stand and be limited and subject to after the confirmation of the inclosure award or the order of exchange or partition, (as the case may be).

13. Where instructions shall have been or shall hereafter be given, under the 34th section of the act of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 118, for the appropriation of any allotment for the site of a school, and such instructions shall not set forth with sufficient clearness for what class of children the school shall be provided, or to whom the site shall be conveyed, or in what manner and by whom the school shall be managed, visited, and inspected, the Inclosure Commissioners shall, upon the requisition of any five persons, if there be so many, or if not, a majority of the persons interested in the land to be inclosed, call a further meeting in order to resolve upon other or further instructions; and if at such meeting any other or further instructions be agreed upon, the same, if sanctioned by the commissioners, shall thenceforth be added to or substituted for, as the case may require, all former instructions relative to such school, and the commissioners shall appoint (whenever needful) some person to convey the allotment for a school in pursuance of the instructions last approved.

5. It shall be lawful for the judges of the Courts of Queen's Bench and Common Pleas and Exchequer, or any three or more of them, as and when any person shall, under the provisions of this act, seek to be admitted as an attorney, and not as a solicitor also, and for the Master of the Rolls, as and when any person shall seek as aforesaid to be admitted as a solicitor, and not as an attorney also, and for the said judges, or any three or more of them, and the Master of the Rolls, jointly, when any person shall seek as aforesaid to be admitted as an attorney and solicitor, and he and they are hereby authorised and required, at any time before he and they shall admit or issue a fiat for the admission of any such person as aforesaid, to examine and inquire, by such ways and means as he or they shall think proper, touching the qualification and the fitness or capacity of such person to act as an attorney or solicitor, or as an attorney and solicitor, and for that purpose it shall be lawful for him or them from time to time, as application for admission as aforesaid shall be made, to appoint such persons as examiners, and to make such orders and regulations for conducting such examination, as he or they shall think proper; and if by any such examination any of the judges of the said courts

6. The admission of any person as an attorney or solicitor under the provisions of this act shall be stamped with the stamps by law required to be impressed on the admission of attornies or solicitors in England, (as the case may be), and the admission first obtained shall be impressed with such further stamp as shall, together with the amount of stamps paid on articles of clerkship and admission in the colony, (to be ascertained as hereinafter provided), be equal in amount to the sum by law payable on articles of clerkship in England.

7. Her Majesty may from time to time, by Order in Council, direct this act to come into operation as to any one or more of her Majesty's colonies or dependencies, and thereupon, but not otherwise, the provisions of this act shall apply to persons duly admitted as attornies and solicitors in the superior courts of law and equity in such colonies or dependencies; but no such Order in Council shall be made in respect of any colony except upon application made by the governor or person exercising the functions of governor of such colony or dependency, and until it shall be shewn to the satisfaction of her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Colonies that the system of jurisprudence as administered in such colony or dependency, and the qualification for admission as an attorney or solicitor in the superior courts of law and equity in such colony or dependency, answer to and fulfil the conditions specified in sect. 3 hereinbefore contained, and also that the attornies or solicitors of the superior courts of law or equity in England are admitted as attornies and solicitors in the superior courts of law and equity of such colony or dependency, on production of their certificates of admission in the English courts, without service or examination in the colony or dependency.

7. And whereas the carrying into effect by the said constabulary force of the provisions of the said acts for the suppression and prevention of illicit distillation in Ireland may eventually render unnecessary the employment of the force now known as the revenue police in Ireland, and will in the meantime enable the Commissioners of Inland Revenue to reduce the numbers of the said last-mentioned force, and it is proper to provide for the compensation of officers and men of the said revenue police who may lose their employment by the discontinuance or reduction of the said last-mentioned force: be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury to grant and allow to any officer or other person who may be deprived of his employment in the said revenue police by reason of any such discontinuance or reduction of the said force as aforesaid such compensation, either by way of pension or gratuity, as the said last-mentioned commissioners may think proper and reasonable in that behalf, to be paid out of the monies provided by Parliament for that purpose: provided always, that if any such officer or other person of the said revenue police shall be appointed under the powers of this act to the said constabulary force, his previous service in the said revenue police shall, for the purpose of superannuation allowance and otherwise, be counted as service in the said constabulary force; provided that a sum of money equal to the rate of 2*l.* 10*s.* per cent. on the aggregate amount of the pay of an officer of the constabulary force for the period of such service in the said revenue police shall be paid on his behalf to the Constabulary Superannuation and Reward Funds.

Whereas it is expedient that provision should be made for obtaining the opinion of a superior court on questions of law which arise in the exercise of summary jurisdiction by justices of the peace: be it enacted as follows:—

Sect. 1. In the interpretation and for the purposes of this act the following words shall have the meaning hereinafter assigned to them; that is to say—

"Superior courts of law" shall for England mean the supreme courts of law at Westminster, and for Ireland the supreme courts of law at Dublin:

"Court of Queen's Bench" shall mean for England the Court of Queen's Bench at Westminster, and for Ireland the Court of Queen's Bench at Dublin.

2. After the hearing and determination by a justice or justices of the peace of any information or complaint which he or they have power to determine in a summary way, by any law now in force or hereafter to be made, either party to the proceeding before the said justice or justices may, if dissatisfied with the said determination as being erroneous in point of law, apply in writing, within three days after the same, to the said justice or justices, to state and sign a case, setting forth the facts and the grounds of such determination, for the opinion thereon of one of the superior courts of law to be named by the party applying; and such party, hereinafter called "the appellant," shall, within three days after receiving such case, transmit the same to the court named in his application, first giving notice in writing of such appeal, with a copy of the case so stated and signed, to the other party to the proceeding in which the determination was given, hereinafter called "the respondent."

3. The appellant, at the time of making such application, and before a case shall be stated and delivered to him by the justice or justices, shall in every instance enter into a recognisance, before such justice or justices, or any one or more of them, or any other justice exercising the same jurisdiction, with or without surety or sureties, and in such sum as to the justice or justices shall seem meet, conditioned to prosecute without delay such appeal, and to submit to the judgment of the superior court, and pay such costs as may be awarded by the same; and the appellant shall at the same time, and before he shall be entitled to have the case delivered to him, pay to the clerk to the said justice or justices his fees for and in respect of the case and recognisances, and any other fees to which such clerk shall be entitled, which fees, except such as are already provided for by law, shall be according to the schedule to this act annexed marked (A.), until the same shall be ascertained, appointed, and regulated in the manner prescribed by the stat. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 30; and the appellant, if then in custody, shall be liberated upon the recognisance being further conditioned for his appearance before the same justice or justices, or, if that is impracticable, before some other justice or justices exercising the same jurisdiction who shall be then sitting, within ten days after the judgment of the superior court shall have been given, to abide such judgment, unless the determination appealed against be reversed.

4. If the justice or justices be of opinion that the application is merely frivolous, but not otherwise, he or they may refuse to state a case, and shall, on the request of the appellant, sign and deliver to him a certificate of such refusal; provided, that the justice or justices shall not refuse to state a case where application for that purpose is made to them by or under the direction of her Majesty's Attorney-General for England or Ireland, as the case may be.

5. Where the justice or justices shall refuse to state a case as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the appellant to apply to the Court of Queen's Bench, upon an affidavit of the facts, for a rule calling upon such justice or justices, and also upon the respondent, to shew cause why such case should not be stated; and the said court may make the same absolute, or discharge it, with or without payment of costs, as to the court shall seem meet, and the justice or justices, upon being served with such rule absolute, shall state a case accordingly, upon the appellant entering into such recognisance as is hereinbefore provided.

6. The court to which a case is transmitted under this act shall hear and determine the question or questions of law arising thereon, and shall thereupon reverse, affirm, or amend the determination in respect of which the case has been stated, or remit the matter to the justice or justices, with the opinion of the court thereon, or may make such other order in relation to the matter, and may make such orders as to costs, as to the court may seem fit; and all such orders shall be final and conclusive on all parties: provided always, that no justice or justices of the peace who shall state and deliver a case in pursuance of this act shall be liable to any costs in respect or by reason of such appeal against his or their determination.

7. The court for the opinion of which a case is stated shall have power, if they think fit, to cause the case to be sent back for amendment, and thereupon the same shall be amended accordingly, and judgment shall be delivered after it shall have been amended.

8. The authority and jurisdiction hereby vested in a superior court for the opinion of which a case is stated under this act shall and may (subject to any rules and orders of such court in relation thereto) be exercised by a judge of such court sitting in chambers, and as well in vacation as in term time.

9. After the decision of the superior court in relation to any case stated for their opinion under this act, the justice or justices in relation to whose determination the case has been stated, or any other justice or justices of the peace exercising the same jurisdiction, shall have the same authority to enforce any conviction or order, which may have been affirmed, amended, or made by such superior court, as the justice or justices who originally decided the case would have had to enforce his or their determination if the same had not been appealed against; and no action or proceeding whatsoever shall be commenced or had against the justice or justices for enforcing such conviction or order, by reason of any defect in the same respectively.

10. No writ of certiorari or other writ shall be required for the removal of any conviction, order, or other determination in relation to which a case is stated under this act, or otherwise, for obtaining the judgment or determination of the superior court on such case under this act.

11. The superior courts of law may from time to time, and as often as they shall see occasion, make and alter rules and orders to regulate the practice and proceedings in reference to the cases hereinbefore mentioned.

12. The words "justice or justices" in this act shall include a magistrate of the police courts of the metropolis and any stipendiary magistrate.

13. In all cases where the conditions, or any of them, in the said recognisance mentioned, shall not have been complied with, the justice or justices who shall have taken the same, or any other justice or justices, shall certify upon the back of the recognisance in what respect the conditions thereof have not been observed, and transmit the same to the clerk of the peace of the county, riding, division, liberty, city, borough, or place within which such recognisance shall have been taken, to be proceeded upon in like manner as other recognisances forfeited at quarter sessions may now by law be enforced, and such certificate shall be deemed sufficient primâ facie evidence of the said recognisance having been forfeited: provided, that where any such recognisances shall have been taken in England before a magistrate of the police courts of the metropolis, or by any stipendiary magistrate, all sums of money in which any person or persons shall be therein bound may, if the said magistrate shall think fit, be levied, upon such recognisance being forfeited, and on non-payment thereof, together with the costs of the proceedings to enforce such payment, in the same manner as a police magistrate of the metropolis is now empowered to recover any penalty, forfeiture, or sum of money, by sect. 45 of an act passed in the 2 & 3 Vict. [c. 71], intituled "An Act for regulating the Police Courts in the Metropolis," and that all and every the provisions and enactments contained in the said sect. 45 shall extend to and be applicable to this act, in as ample a manner as if they had been herein re-enacted and made part of the same.

14. Any person who shall appeal, under the provisions of this act, against any determination of a justice or justices of the peace from which he is by law entitled to appeal to the quarter sessions, shall be taken to have abandoned such last-mentioned right of appeal, finally and conclusively, and to all intents and purposes.

Whereas an act was passed in the 6 Geo. 4, c. 99, to make provision for defining the boundaries of certain denominations of land in Ireland; and another act was passed in the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 17, to provide for the revision of such boundaries: and whereas it is expedient to make further provision for defining such boundaries for the purpose of the revision of the Ordnance survey, and for other public purposes: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. When the boundary surveyor for the time being shall find that the boundaries of any land have been erroneously marked out, laid down, or described on the Ordnance map of any county, he may make such alteration therein as the circumstances of the case shall require; provided that the application be made to him for such alteration by the owner or owners or reputed owners of such land on each side of the boundary in question, accompanied by a plan shewing in detail the original boundaries so erroneously marked out, and those which it is proposed and agreed upon by the said owners to substitute for them.

11. Person who for the time being would be entitled to present shall be considered the patron.
12. Lease to be by indenture.

Whereas it would be for the public advantage that ecclesiastical persons in Ireland should be empowered in certain cases to demise a portion of their glebe lands for building purposes: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. In citing this act for any purpose it shall be sufficient to use the expression "The Glebe Lands Leasing Powers (Ireland) Act, 1857."

In the construction of this act the words "lord lieutenant" shall include any chief governor or governors of Ireland; the words "successors in estate" shall mean the persons entitled for the time being, after the lessor, to the receipt of the rents of the lands comprised in any lease made under this act; the word "lessee" shall include the personal representative of any lessee and his lawful assigns; the word "lessor" shall include the successors in estate of any lessor; the words "ecclesiastical person" shall include archbishops, bishops, and all other ecclesiastical corporations, sole or aggregate; the word "town" shall mean any borough or town corporate in Ireland, and any town in which a board of municipal commissioners shall have been elected under the provisions of an act of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 108, or in which town commissioners shall have been appointed under the provisions of an act of the 9 Geo. 4, c. 82, or an act of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 103, or any act amending the same.

3. It shall be lawful for any ecclesiastical person in Ireland entitled to any glebe lands situate within the limits of any city or town in Ireland, or within two miles thereof, from time to time to make leases of any part of such lands for building thereon, either together or in parcels, for any term of years not exceeding ninety-nine years, to take effect in possession, and not in reversion, or by way of future interest, subject to the provisions in this act contained.

4. The rent reserved in any such lease shall be the best improved yearly rent that, at the time of making such lease, can be obtained or reasonably expected from a solvent tenant, without taking any fine or other consideration of any kind, and so that no such lessee be made dispunishable for waste: provided always, that it shall be lawful to reserve a reduced rent for the first three years of the term.

5. No such lease shall include the glebe-house, mansion-house, or place of residence of any ecclesiastical person, or the demesne, lands, garden, or pleasure grounds and appurtenances belonging to or usually occupied therewith, or which may be necessary or convenient for actual occupation with such glebe-house, mansion-house, or place of residence; and where there is no house or place of residence on such glebe lands, no such lease shall include any portion of the glebe lands that may be required or suitable for the erection of a glebe-house or place of residence thereon, unless the consent written on or annexed to such lease shall specify that a sufficient quantity of land required and suitable for the erection of a glebe-house or place of residence remains undemised in the hands of such ecclesiastical person; and provided also, that no lease made under this act by any archbishop shall be valid without the consent of the lord lieutenant, or by any bishop without the consent of the archbishop of his province, or by any other ecclesiastical person without the consent of the archbishop of the province, the bishop of the diocese, and of the patron of such benefice, and such consents shall be testified by the persons whose consents are hereby required respectively being parties to and signing and sealing such leases, or signing a written indorsement of such consent thereon.

6. Whenever any lease is intended to be made under the authority of this act, a map or plan under actual survey of the lands proposed to be leased shall be made by a competent land surveyor, to be appointed by the person desirous of making the lease, shewing the local situation and quantity of the lands proposed to be leased, and of the lands intended to be reserved; and such surveyor shall also make a valuation, on actual survey, of the lands proposed to be leased, and shall report what is the best yearly rent which ought to be reserved on a lease of such lands, and shall also report upon all such other matters connected with such intended lease as he shall be directed to report upon; and the map or plan, certificate, valuation, and report shall be respectively signed by such surveyor, and verified by his declaration to be made before any justice of the peace: provided always, that when there shall be any existing map or plan, made under actual survey of the district, which shall include the lands intended to be demised, a copy of or extract from such map or plan may be substituted for the map or plan hereinbefore directed to be made.

7. Every lease made under this act shall contain a covenant that the tenant shall pay the rent reserved, and all taxes and impositions whatsoever which shall be payable in respect of the lands thereby demised, save the landlord's proportion of poor rates, and also a condition and agreement on the part of the lessee to erect in a permanent and substantial manner on the demised premises buildings of a value to be specified therein, and to keep such buildings during the term in good and substantial repair, and insured against damage by fire in three-fourths at least of the value thereof, and also that the lessee will lay out the money to be received on any such insurance, and all such other sums of money as shall be necessary, in substantially reinstating such buildings as shall be destroyed or damaged by fire, and to give up peaceable possession of the lands so demised, with all buildings, fixtures, and improvements therein, on the determination of such lease; and also every such lease shall contain a power of re-entry in case such buildings shall not have been erected within five years from the commencement of the said lease: provided also, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to preclude the lessor in any such lease from covenanting that the lessee may take from off the demised premises brick, earth, stone, lime, or other materials for the erection or repair of the said buildings, or the construction or repair of drains connected therewith, or that he may use such portion of the demised premises as shall be limited in such lease for the purpose of laying out new streets or approaches to such buildings, or for making any drainage necessary for such buildings.

8. The consent of the lord lieutenant, archbishop, bishop, and patron, whose consents are hereby made requisite to any lease testified in manner hereinbefore described, shall be conclusive evidence that such lease does not comprise any lands which ought not to be leased under the provisions of this act, and that a proper portion of the glebe land remains unleased, and that the rent thereby reserved is the best and most improved rent, and that the conditions required by this act have been duly observed.

9. Whenever the patron shall happen to be a minor, idiot, lunatic, or feme covert, it shall be lawful for the guardian, committee of the estate, or husband (as the case may be) of such patron (but in the case of a feme covert, not being a minor, idiot, or lunatic, with her consent in writing) to execute the instrument by which such consent is to be testified, in testimony of the consent of such patron, and such execution shall, for the purposes of this act, be deemed and taken to be an execution by the patron of the benefice.

10. Whenever the patronage shall be in the Crown, the consent of the Crown shall be testified by the signing of such consent by the lord lieutenant; and whenever the patronage shall belong to any dean and chapter, or collegiate or other corporate body having a common seal, the consent of such corporate body shall be testified by the sealing of the instrument by which such consent is testified with the common seal of such corporate body.

11. The person or persons, (if not more than two), or the majority of the persons, (if more than two), or the corporation who or which would for the time being be entitled to the turn or right of presentation to any benefice if the same were then vacant, shall, for the purposes of this act, be considered to be the patron thereof: provided nevertheless, that in the case of the patronage being exercised alternately by different patrons, the person or persons, (if not more than two), or the majority of the persons, (if more than two), or the corporation, who or which would for the time being be entitled to the second turn or right of presentation to any benefice if the same were then vacant, shall, for the purposes of this act, jointly with the person or persons or corporation entitled to the first turn or right of presentation, be considered to be the patron thereof.

12. Every lease made pursuant to the provisions of this act shall be by indenture, and a counterpart of every such lease shall be executed by the lessee thereof, and shall be valid and effectual to bind the lessor and his successors, provided that the same shall within six months from the execution thereof by the lessor be inrolled in the Rolls Office of the High Court of Chancery in Ireland, for which no greater fee than 10*s.* shall be chargeable.

13. This act shall extend to Ireland only.

Whereas industrial schools for the better training of vagrant children have been and may be established in various parts of England, and it is expedient that more extensive use should be made of such institutions, and that the responsibility of parents to provide for the proper care of their children should be enforced: be it enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. This act may be cited as "The Industrial Schools Act, 1857."

2. The following words and expressions shall have the meanings hereby assigned to them respectively, unless there be something in the subject or context repugnant to such construction—

"Police" shall include every policeman, police constable, parish constable, tythingman, or headborough:

"Justices" shall include any two or more justices of the peace acting together, and also any person who by the act of the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, ss. 33, 34, is authorised to do alone whatsoever is authorised by that act to be done by any two or more justices of the peace :

"Child" shall include any boy or girl who in the opinion of the justices is above the age of seven and under the age of fourteen :

"Certified industrial school" shall mean any school or institution certified under this act :

"Managers" shall include the directors, managers, or other persons who shall have the management or control of any certified industrial school :

"Parent" shall include any person legally liable to maintain a child, and also any person upon whom an order for affiliation has been made and not quashed :

"County" shall include any city, borough, riding, or division of a county having a separate commission of the peace.

3. The Committee of her Majesty's Privy Council on Education may, upon the application of the managers of any school in which industrial training is provided, and in which children are fed as well as taught, direct such person as they may appoint to examine and report to them upon its condition and regulations, and if satisfied therewith may grant a certificate under the hand of the president of her Majesty's Privy Council, or of the vice-president of the said committee thereof, and thenceforth the school shall be a certified industrial school within the meaning of this act: provided always, that no school shall be certified both under this act and under the act of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 86.

4. The said committee shall direct a report of the condition and regulations of every certified industrial school to be made to them at least once in each year by such person as they may appoint; and if upon his report the committee is dissatisfied with the condition or regulations of the school, they may withdraw their certificate, and upon notice in writing of such withdrawal having been given to the managers thereof, the school shall cease to be a certified industrial school from such time as shall be specified in the notice.

5. When any child is taken into custody on a charge of vagrancy under any local or general act, the justices, on receiving satisfactory proof in support of such charge, may, if the parent, or in case of an orphan, if the guardian or nearest adult relative, of the child cannot at once be found, and provided there be any certified industrial school the managers of which are willing to receive him, order the child to be sent to such industrial school for any period not exceeding one week, and shall direct due inquiries to be made, and notice (Form A.) to be given to the parent or guardian, or nearest adult relative of the child, if any can be found, or to the persons with whom the child is or was last known to have been residing, of the circumstances under which the child has been taken into custody, and that the matter will be inquired into at the time and place mentioned in the notice.

6. At the time and place mentioned in the notice, any justices may make full inquiry into the matter, and may, if they shall think fit, order the child to be discharged altogether, or, if the parent (or where the child is an orphan, then the guardian or nearest adult relative) be found, may, on conviction of such child on such charge as aforesaid, deliver him up to his parent, (or, where the child is an orphan, to the guardian or nearest adult relative as aforesaid), on his giving an assurance in writing (Form B.) that he will be responsible for the good behaviour of the child for any period not exceeding twelve months, and in default of such assurance being given, may, by writing under their hands and seals, (Form C.), order the child to be sent, for such period as they may think necessary for his education and training, to any certified industrial school the managers of which are willing to receive him : provided, however, if within the county where the child was taken into custody, or any adjoining county, there shall be any certified industrial school conducted on the principles of the religious persuasion to which the parent of the child, in the opinion of the justices, shall belong, and the managers of such school shall be willing to receive him, such child shall be sent to such last-mentioned school, and not to any other.

7. If the child, after such assurance as aforesaid being given, be brought up again on a similar charge within the period for which the parent, or, in case of an orphan, the guardian or nearest adult relative, has become responsible for his good behaviour, the justices may inflict a fine upon the parent or guardian or nearest relative as aforesaid, not exceeding 40*s.*, should it be proved, to the satisfaction of the justices, that the last-mentioned act of vagrancy has taken place through the neglect of the parent.

8. The time during which any child shall be lodged in any certified industrial school under this act shall, for all the purposes of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 66, and of every act incorporated therewith, be excluded in the computation of the time therein mentioned.

9. If the parent, or, in case of an orphan, if the guardian or nearest adult relative, objects to the certified industrial school to which the child has been sent or ordered to be sent, and proposes some other certified industrial school, and proves that the managers of it are willing to receive the child, and, if on any other than religious ground, pays or finds good security to pay any expenses which may be incurred in consequence of his objection, any justice of the county where the child was taken into custody shall order (Form D.) the child to be sent to the certified industrial school proposed by the parent or guardian or nearest adult relative as aforesaid.

10. In every industrial school a book shall be kept by the managers, to which access shall be had at all reasonable hours, in which the religious denomination of the child, when admitted to the industrial school, shall be entered; and it shall be lawful, upon the representation of the parent, or in case of an orphan, then of the guardian or nearest adult relative, of any inmate placed in such industrial school under the provisions of this act, for a minister of the religious persuasion of the inmate of such industrial school, at certain fixed hours of the day, which shall be fixed by the managers for the purpose, to visit such schools for the purpose of affording religious assistance to such inmate, and also for the purpose of instructing such inmate in the principles of his religion.

11. A duplicate of the order under which any child is, in pursuance of this act, ordered to be sent to a certified industrial school shall be sent to the managers thereof, and shall be a sufficient warrant for the detention of the child.

12. On the application of the parent, or in case of an orphan, then of the guardian or nearest adult relative, or of the managers, any justices of the county in which the school is situate, or of the county where such parent resides, if satisfied that a suitable employment in life has been provided for the child, or that there is otherwise sufficient cause, may discharge (Form E.) the child from the certified industrial school before the full expiration of the period for which he has been sent there, or may order his removal from one certified industrial school to another, (Form F.), or may order him to be discharged altogether.

13. On good security being at any time found by the parent or by any other person, any justices of the county in which the certified industrial school to which the child has been sent is situate, or of the county where such parent resides, shall order (Form G.) the child to be discharged therefrom : provided always, that the security shall be in such amount as the justices determine, or may be rejected by them altogether, on its being proved to their satisfaction that security for the child has at any time, and under any circumstances, been previously rejected or forfeited.

14. No person shall be detained in any certified industrial school under this act beyond the age of fifteen years, against his consent.

15. Any justices of the county in which the certified industrial school to which the child has been sent is situate, or in which the parent is residing, may, upon the complaint of the managers, summon the parent, and examine into his circumstances, and in their discretion may order him (Form H.) to pay to such managers, or to any person authorised by them from time to time to receive it, a weekly sum, not exceeding 3*s.*, until the child attains the age of fifteen years, or is lawfully discharged; and on default of payment for the space of fourteen days, the like proceedings may be taken for enforcing and recovering the same as are hereinafter provided for the enforcing and recovering of any penalty or forfeiture imposed by this act.

16. The parent or the managers may at any time apply to any justices of the county in which the certified industrial school is situate, or in which the parent is residing, for an order to diminish the amount of the weekly sum payable by the parent, or to increase it to an amount not exceeding 3*s.* per week; and the justices, on proof that the parent or the managers have given to each other (as the case may be) not less than one week's notice in writing of the intended application, and of the time and place of hearing the same, shall make full inquiry into the matter, and may diminish or increase the amount of the weekly sum payable by the parent, as they think fit, or may release him from such payment altogether. (Forms I. and K.)

17. The managers may, at their discretion, permit any child to sleep or lodge at the dwelling of his parent, or of any trustworthy and respectable person, and may also, at their discretion, revoke such permission: provided always, that they shall continue to board and feed the child in all respects as if he were lodging in the certified industrial school.

18. If any child, whether lodging in the school or elsewhere, before attaining the age of fifteen years, or being duly discharged, wilfully absconds from the school, or neglects his attendance thereat, any justice of the county in which the certified industrial school is situate, or in which the child is retaken, may, by writing under his hand and seal, order him to be sent back to the school, and to be detained there until he attains the age of fifteen years, or for such shorter period as the justices think fit.

19. Any person who directly or indirectly withdraws a child from the certified industrial school to which he has been sent, or induces him to abscond therefrom, previous to his attaining the age of fifteen years or being duly discharged, or who knowingly conceals or harbours him, or in any way prevents his return, shall for every such offence be liable in a penalty not exceeding 2*l.*, to be recovered by summary proceedings before two justices in or near the place where the offence is committed, or where the offender may at the time being happen to be, in manner provided by the act of the session holden in the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43.

20. The leaving of any summons or notice or order, authorised to be issued or made by any justices under this act, at the usual or last known place of abode of the party to whom the same respectively is directed, shall in every case be deemed a good and sufficient service thereof.

21. The guardians of any union or any parish wherein the relief to the poor is administered by a board of guardians may, if they deem proper, with consent of the Poor-law Board, contract with the managers of any certified industrial school for the maintenance and education of any pauper child.

22. Whenever it shall be necessary to prove that any industrial school is duly certified or sanctioned under this act, the production of an attested copy of the certificate shall be sufficient evidence thereof; and the production of an original duplicate of the order under which any child has been sent to or is detained in any certified industrial school under this act, or a copy of such order with a memorandum signed by the manager or superintendent, or master or matron of any such school, that the young person named in such order was duly received into and is at the signing thereof detained in such school, or has been otherwise disposed of according to law, and the production of an original duplicate of any order made upon the parent under this act, or a copy thereof certified by the clerk to the justices making the same to be a correct copy, shall in all proceedings whatsoever be sufficient evidence of the due making and signing of all or any of such orders, memorandum, and certificate respectively, and of the sending, detention, and identity of the child or parent named in such orders respectively, without proof of the signatures or official characters of the justices or other persons appearing to have signed the same respectively.

23. Whenever the Committee of her Majesty's Privy Council on Education shall at any time grant a certificate under this act to any industrial school, they shall within one calendar month cause a notice thereof to be published in the London Gazette, and such publication shall be a sufficient evidence of the fact of such industrial school having been certified to justify any justices to commit any child thereto, subject to the provisions of this act; and whenever the committee shall withdraw the certificate granted to any industrial school, they shall within one calendar month give notice of such withdrawal in the said Gazette.

24. The several forms in the schedule to this act annexed, or any forms to the like effect, shall in all cases be sufficient: provided always, that any summons, notice, or order shall not be invalidated for want of form only.

25. This act shall not extend to Ireland or Scotland.

Whereas it is expedient to amend the law relating to copartnerships and companies carrying on the business of banking, and hereinafter included under the term "banking companies:" be it enacted &c. as follows:—

Preliminary.

Sect. 1. This act may be cited for all purposes as "The Joint-stock Banking Companies Act, 1857."

2. The Joint-stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, shall be deemed to be incorporated with and to form part of this act.

Registration of existing Banking Companies.

3. The 2nd section of the Joint-stock Companies Act, 1856, shall be repealed so far as relates to persons associated together for the purpose of banking, subject to this proviso, that no existing or future banking company shall be registered as a limited company.

4. Every banking company consisting of seven or more persons, and formed under the acts following, or either of them —that is to say,

(1). An act passed in the eighth year of the reign of her present Majesty, c. 113, and intituled "An Act to regulate Joint-stock Banks in England,"

(2). An Act passed in the tenth year of the reign of her present Majesty, c. 75, and intituled "An Act to regulate Joint-stock Banks in Scotland and Ireland," shall, on or before the 1st January, 1858, register itself as a company under this act.

5. If any banking company hereby required to register under this act makes default in registering on or before the said 1st January, 1858, then from and after such day, until the day on which such company is registered under this act, the following consequences shall ensue; that is to say—

(1). The company shall be incapable of suing either at law or in equity, but shall not be incapable of being made a defendant to a suit either at law or in equity:

(2). No dividend shall be payable to any shareholder in such company:

(3). Each director or manager of the company shall for each day during which the company is in default incur a penalty of 5*l.*, and such penalty may be recovered by any person, whether a shareholder or not in the company, and be applied by him to his own use:

nevertheless such default shall not render the company so being in default illegal, nor subject it to any penalty or disability, other than as specified in this section.

6. Any banking company, consisting of seven or more persons, having a capital of fixed amount, and divided into shares also of fixed amount, legally carrying on the business of banking previously to the passing of this act, and not being a company hereby required to be registered, may, at any time hereafter, with the assent of a majority of such of its shareholders as may have been present in person, or in cases where proxies are allowed by the regulations of the company, by proxy, at some general meeting summoned for the purpose, register itself as a company other than a limited company under this act, and when so registered all such provisions contained in any act of Parliament, letters-patent, or deed of settlement constituting or regulating the company, as are inconsistent with the Joint-stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, or with this act, shall no longer apply to the company so registered; but such registration shall not take away or affect any powers previously enjoyed by such company of banking, issuing notes payable on demand, or of doing any other thing.

7. No fees shall be payable in respect of the registration under this act of any banking company existing at the time of the passing of this act.

8. The registration under this act of any banking company existing at the time of the passing of this act, and hereby required or authorised to be registered, shall not affect or prejudice the liability of such company to have enforced against it, or its right to enforce, any debt or obligation incurred, or any contract entered into by, to, with, or on account of such company, previously to such registration, and all such debts, obligations, and contracts shall be binding on the company when so registered, and the other parties thereto, to the same extent as if such registration had not taken place.

9. Every person who, at or previously to the date of the registration under this act of any banking company hereby required or authorised to be registered, may have held shares in such company, shall, in the event of the same being wound up by the court or voluntarily, be liable to contribute to the assets of the company the same amount that he would, if this act had not been passed, have been liable to pay to the company, or for or on account of any debt of the company in pursuance of any action, suit, judgment, or other legal proceeding that might, if this act had not been passed, have been instituted or enforced against himself or the company.

10. All such actions, suits, and other legal proceedings as may, at the time of the registration under this act of any company hereby required or authorised to be registered, have been commenced by or against such company, or the public officer thereof, may be continued in the same manner as if such registration had not taken place; nevertheless execution shall not issue against the effects of any individual shareholder in or member of such company upon any judgment, decree, or order obtained against such company in any action, suit, or proceeding so commenced as aforesaid; but, in the event of the property and effects of the company being insufficient to satisfy such judgment, decree, or order, an order may be obtained for winding up the company, in manner directed by the Joint-stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857.

Winding up of the Banking Companies.

11. The following acts—that is to say,

(1). The act of the eleventh year of the reign of her present Majesty, c. 45,

(2). The act of the thirteenth year of the reign of her present Majesty, c. 108,

(3). The act of the eighth year of the reign of her present Majesty, c. 111,

(4). The act of the ninth year of the reign of her present Majesty, c. 98, shall not apply to companies registered under this act, or under the acts incorporated herewith, or either of them; and all companies so registered shall be wound up in manner directed by the said incorporated acts.

Repeal.

12. The above-mentioned acts—that is to say,

The said act passed in the eighth year of the reign of her present Majesty, c. 113, and

The said act passed in the tenth year of the reign of her present Majesty, c. 75, shall forthwith be repealed as respects any banking company to be formed hereafter, and shall, from and after such time as any company formed in pursuance of such acts, or either of them, may have registered as a company under this act, but not before, be repealed as respects the company so registered; and the articles of Table B. in the schedule annexed to the Joint-stock Companies Act, 1856, relating to "shares," to 'transmission of shares," and to "forfeiture of shares," and numbered from one to nineteen, both inclusive, shall, from and after such time as last aforesaid, but subject to the power of alteration conferred by the Joint-stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, be deemed to be regulations of any company formed in pursuance of the said acts passed in the eighth and tenth years of her present Majesty; nevertheless such repeal shall not affect any penalty, forfeiture, or other punishment incurred or to be incurred in respect of any offence against any acts hereby repealed committed before such repeal comes into operation; and notwithstanding anything contained in the said act of the 8 Vict. c. 113, or in any other act, it shall be lawful for any number of persons, not exceeding ten, to carry on in partnership the business of banking, in the same manner and upon the same conditions in all respects as any company, if not more than six persons, could before the passing of this act have carried on such business.

Formation of new Banking Companies.

13. Seven or more persons associated for the purpose of banking may register themselves under this act as a company other than a limited company, subject to this condition, that the shares into which the capital of the company is divided shall not be of less amount than 100*l.* each; but not more than ten persons shall after the passing of this act, unless registered as a company under this act, form themselves into a partnership for the purpose of banking, or, if so formed, carry on the business of banking.

Examination of Affairs of Company.

14. No appointment of inspectors to examine into the affairs of any banking company shall be made by the Board of Trade, in pursuance of the Joint-stock Companies Act, 1856, except upon the application of one-third at the least in number and value of the shareholders in such company.

Sect. 19 of Joint-stock Companies Act not to apply.

15. The 19th section of the Joint-stock Companies Act, 1856, shall not apply to any banking company in Scotland registered under this act.

Transfer of Trust Property.

16. All such estate or interest in real and personal property in England and Ireland, and in property, heritable and moveable, in Scotland, and all such deeds, bonds, obligations, and rights as may belong to or be vested in any person or persons in trust for any banking company at the date of its registration under this act, or in trust for any other company at the date of its registration under the Joint-stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, shall immediately on registration vest in such banking or other company; but no merger shall take place of any estates by reason of their uniting in the company under this section, without the express consent of the company, certified by some instrument under their common seal.

Banking Companies not registered as such.

17. If, through inadvertence or otherwise, a company that is in fact a banking company has previously to the passing of this act been registered as a limited company under the Joint-stock Companies Act, 1856, or if, through inadvertence or otherwise, a company that is in fact a banking company is hereafter registered under the said Joint-stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, as a limited company, any company so registered shall not be illegal, nor shall the registration thereof be invalid, but it shall be subject to the following liabilities; that is to say—

(1). Any creditor or member of the company may petition the court to have it wound up, and the fact of its being registered as a limited company shall of itself be a sufficient circumstance on which an order shall be made for winding up the same:

(2). In the event of such company being wound up the contributories shall, whether the company is or not registered as a limited company, be liable to contribute to the assets of the company to an amount sufficient to pay its debts, and the costs, charges, and expenses of winding up the same.

Saving Clauses.

18. The Joint-stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, shall not apply to any banking company legally carrying on the business of banking previously to the passing of this act, and not hereby required to be registered, until such time as such company registers itself under this act, in pursuance of the power hereby given in that behalf.

19. Nothing herein contained shall affect an act passed in the 7 & 8 Vict. [c. 32], intituled "An Act to regulate the Issue of Bank Notes, and for giving to the Governor and Company of the Bank of England certain Privileges for a limited Period," or an act passed in the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 38, intituled "An Act to regulate the Issue of Bank Notes in Scotland," or any other act relating to the issue or circulation of bank notes.

CAP. L.

An Act to amend the Acts concerning Municipal Corporations in England. [17th August, 1857.]

Sect. 1. Sect. 75 of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, repealed.
2. Powers, property, and liabilities of trustees for paving &c. may be, on the grant of a charter of incorporation under the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, transferred to the body corporate of the borough.
3. No transfer to be made without a resolution of the borough council.
4. Confirmation of transfers under the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 75, of property and liabilities.
5. All duties imposed upon town clerks of boroughs, &c. by the act 3 Geo. 4, c. 46, to be performed by the clerks of the peace.
6. In boroughs consisting of more than one parish, in case the burgess roll for any parish not made out in any year, previous burgess roll to continue in force for such parish.
7. Overseers of the poor to make out burgess roll on or before the first day of September in every year.
8. Acts to be construed as one.

Whereas, by sect. 75 of the act passed in the session holden in the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, "to provide for the Regulation of Municipal Corporations in England and Wales," it was provided that the trustees appointed under any act of Parliament for paving, lighting, cleansing, watching, regulating, supplying with water, and improving any borough named in one of the Schedules (A.) and (B.) to the act now in recital, or part thereof, might, if it should seem to them expedient, transfer all the powers vested in them as such trustees by any such act to the body corporate of such borough, and the body corporate of such borough should thenceforth be trustee for executing by the council of such borough the several powers and provisions of any such act of Parliament; provided always, that no such transfer should be made of the powers vested by virtue of the acts mentioned in Schedule (E.) to the act now in recital which relate to the town of Cambridge without the consent of the chancellor, masters, and scholars of the University of Cambridge: and whereas doubts have arisen as to the construction of the said section, and it is expedient to amend the same as hereinafter provided: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. The hereinbefore-recited enactment shall be repealed, save so far as relates to any transfer made thereunder before the passing of this act.

2. The trustees appointed or acting by or under any act of Parliament for paving, lighting, supplying with water or gas, or cleansing, watching, regulating, or improving, or for providing or maintaining a cemetery or market in or for any borough named in one of the said schedules to the said act of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, or to which a charter of incorporation has been since the passing of such act, or shall be hereafter, granted under the provisions of the said act or otherwise, or any part of any such borough, and whether the powers of such trustees under any such act do or do not extend beyond the limits of such borough, may, if it seem to them expedient, at a meeting to be called for that purpose, transfer to the body corporate of such borough all the rights, powers, estates, property, and liabilities of such trustees under any such act as aforesaid, and such transfer shall be made in writing under the common seal of the said trustees, if they be a corporation, or, if not a corporation, then by deed executed by the trustees, or any two of them acting by the authority of and on behalf of all such trustees; and upon any such transfer being so made the body corporate to whom such transfer is made shall become and be trustee for executing by the council of the borough the several powers and provisions of any such act as aforesaid, and all the rights, powers, estates, and property vested in the trustees making such transfer shall vest in such body corporate, and all the liabilities and obligations of the said trustees shall stand transferred to and be borne by such body corporate, and the said trustees shall be freed and discharged from all such liabilities and obligations; but nothing herein contained shall authorise any such transfer in the case of the town of Cambridge without the consent required by the said recited enactment.

3. Provided always, that no such transfer as aforesaid shall be made or take effect unless and until the council of the borough have resolved, at a meeting of such council holden and convened in manner required by the said act of Will. 4, to accept the same.

4. Where, under the hereinbefore-recited enactment, the trustees under any such act of Parliament as therein mentioned have transferred to the body corporate of any borough the powers vested in such trustees under such act, and the transfer so made purports to extend to the estates and property vested in such trustees, and their liabilities and obligations on any of such matters, the transfer so made shall be deemed to have been authorised by the said enactment.

5. Whereas, by an act passed in the session of Parliament holden in the 3 Geo. 4, c. 46, intituled "An Act for the more speedy Return and levying of Fines, Penalties, and Forfeitures, and Recognisances estreated," certain duties are imposed upon the town clerks of cities, boroughs, or places in England: from and after the passing of this act all duties imposed upon town clerks by such act shall be performed by the clerks of the peace for such cities, boroughs, and places, where the offices of town clerk and clerk of the peace are not united in the same person; and such clerks of the peace are hereby required to make all returns, issue all processes, and do and perform all other acts which are imposed upon town clerks by the said recited act.

6. Whereas, by an act passed in the session holden in the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 78, "to amend an Act for the Regulation of Municipal Corporations in England and Wales," it was enacted, that in every borough in which, by reason of any neglect or informality, a new burgess roll of the said borough shall not have been made in any year within the time directed by the said act for the regulation of municipal corporations, the burgess roll which was in force before the time appointed for the revision shall continue in force until such new burgess roll shall have been duly made: and whereas the said recited enactment applies only to any borough in which a new burgess roll shall not have been made as therein mentioned: and whereas it is expedient to provide as to any borough consisting of more parishes than one wholly or in part within any borough in which a new burgess roll shall have been made out, but in which the burgess list or lists of one or more of such parishes wholly or in part within such borough shall have been omitted: be it enacted, that in every borough, consisting of more parishes than one wholly or in part within such borough, in which, by reason of any neglect or informality, a burgess list of any parish or of parts of any parish within such borough shall not have been made out in any year, or in case such burgess list shall not have been revised as required by the said act for the regulation of municipal corporations, so much of the burgess roll which was in force before the time appointed for the revision as contains the names of the burgesses entitled to vote in respect of property within such parish or part of parish shall continue in force, and be taken to be the list of burgesses entitled to vote in respect of such property until a burgess list for such parish or part of parish shall have been revised and become part of the burgess roll.

7. Whereas, by the 15th section of the act to provide for the regulation of municipal corporations in England and Wales, it was enacted, that on the 5th September in every year the overseers of the poor of every parish wholly or in part within any borough shall make out a list, to be called "the burgess list," according to the provisions therein contained, and shall deliver the same to the town clerk of the borough on the said 5th September in every year, and shall keep a true copy of such lists, to be perused without payment of any fee at all reasonable hours between the 5th and 15th September in every year, and that the town clerk shall forthwith cause copies of all overseers' lists so delivered to him to be printed, and shall cause a copy of all such lists to be published, as therein provided, on every day during the week next preceding the 15th September in every year: and whereas it has been found in populous boroughs that the several matters so required to be done by the town clerk cannot be duly carried into effect within the time so specified in that behalf: be it enacted, that from and after the passing of this act the overseers of the poor of every parish wholly or in part within any borough shall, on or before the 1st September in every year, instead of on the 5th September, make out a list, to be called "the burgess list," according to the provisions in the said recited section contained, and shall, on or before the said 1st September in every year, instead of on the 5th September, deliver the same to the town clerk of the borough, and shall keep a true copy of such lists, to be perused by any person without payment of any fee at all reasonable hours between the 1st and 15th September in every year, instead of between the 5th and 15th September.

8. The said act of Will. 4 and this act shall be construed together as one act.

Whereas it is expedient that all jurisdiction in relation to the grant and revocation of probates of wills and letters of administration in England should be exercised, in the name of her Majesty, by one court: be it enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. This act (except where otherwise specially provided) shall come into operation on such day, not sooner than the 1st day of January, 1858, as her Majesty shall by Order in Council appoint, provided that such order shall be made one month at least previously to the day so to be appointed.

2. In the construction of this act, unless the context be inconsistent with the meaning hereby assigned—

"Will" shall comprehend "testament" and all other testamentary instruments of which probate may now be granted:

"Administration" shall comprehend all letters of administration of the effects of deceased persons, whether with or without the will annexed, and whether granted for general, special, or limited purposes:

"Matters and causes testamentary" shall comprehend all matters and causes relating to the grant and revocation of probate of wills or of administration:

"Common form business" shall mean the business of obtaining probate and administration where there is no contention as to the right thereto, including the passing of probates and administrations through the Court of Probate in contentious cases when the contest is terminated, and all business of a non-contentious nature to be taken in the court in matters of testacy and intestacy, not being proceedings in any suit, and also the business of lodging caveats against the grant of probate or administration.

3. The voluntary and contentious jurisdiction and authority of all ecclesiastical, royal peculiar, peculiar, manorial, and other courts and persons in England, now having jurisdiction or authority to grant or revoke probate of wills or letters of administration of the effects of deceased persons, shall in respect of such matters absolutely cease; and no jurisdiction or authority in relation to any matters or causes testamentary, or to any matter arising out of or connected with the grant or revocation of probate or administration, shall belong to or be exercised by any such court or person.

4. The voluntary and contentious jurisdiction and authority in relation to the granting or revoking probate of wills and letters of administration of the effects of deceased persons now vested in, or which can be exercised by, any court or person in England, together with full authority to hear and determine all questions relating to matters and causes testamentary, shall belong to and be vested in her Majesty, and shall, except as hereinafter mentioned, be exercised in the name of her Majesty in a court to be called "the Court of Probate," and to hold its ordinary sittings and, to have its principal registry at such place or places in London or Middlesex as her Majesty in Council shall from time to time appoint.

5. There shall be one judge of her Majesty's Court of Probate; and it shall be lawful for her Majesty from time to time, by letters-patent under the Great Seal of the United Kingdom, to appoint a person, being or having been an advocate of ten years' standing, or a barrister-at-law of fifteen years' standing, to be such judge.

6. The judge of the Court of Probate shall hold his office during good behaviour, provided that it shall be lawful for her Majesty to remove any such judge from his office upon an address of both Houses of Parliament.

7. Every judge of the Court of Probate shall, before executing any of the duties of his office, take the following oath, which the Lord Chancellor or the Master of the Rolls for the time being is hereby respectively authorised and required to administer:

> "I, A. B., do solemnly and sincerely promise and swear, that I will duly and faithfully, and to the best of my skill and power, execute the office of judge of the Court of Probate.
> "So help me God."

8. The judge shall have rank and precedence with the puisne judges of her Majesty's superior courts of common law at Westminster, according to the date of his appointment, and he shall have a secretary and usher, to be from time to time appointed and removed by him at his pleasure.

9. There shall be paid to the judge the net yearly salary of 4000*l*., and to his secretary the net yearly salary of 300*l*., and to his usher the net yearly salary of 150*l*.

10. Upon the next vacancy in the office of judge of the High Court of Admiralty of England it shall be lawful for her Majesty, if she so think fit, to appoint the person then being judge of the Court of Probate to be also judge of the said Court of Admiralty; or in case the office of judge of the Court of Probate become vacant before the office of judge of the Court of Admiralty, the judge of the Court of Admiralty may, with his consent, be appointed to and hold also the office of judge of the Court of Probate; and after the union of the said two offices they shall be thenceforth held by the same person.

11. From and after the union under this act of the two offices of judge of the Court of Probate and judge of the Court of Admiralty in the same person the said yearly salary of 4000*l*. payable under this act shall be increased to 5000*l*., and the salary now payable to the judge of the Court of Admiralty shall cease.

12. Her Majesty, by letters-patent under the Great Seal of the United Kingdom, may grant unto any person executing the office of judge of her Majesty's Court of Probate an annuity, not exceeding 2000*l*., or if such person be also executing the office of judge of the said Court of Admiralty, not exceeding 3500*l*., to commence immediately after the day when the person to whom such annuity shall be granted shall resign the said office or offices, and to continue during his natural life: provided that her Majesty may, in and by such letters-patent, limit the duration of payment of such annuity, or any part thereof, to such periods of time during the natural life of such person in which he shall not exercise any office of profit under her Majesty, so that such annuity, together with the salary and profits of such other office, shall together not exceed in the whole the said sum of 2000*l*. or 3500*l*., as the case may be: provided also, that no annuity granted to any person having executed the office of judge under this act, except the present judge of the Prerogative Court, shall be valid unless such person shall have held such office for the period of fifteen years, or have held such office and any of the offices of judge in any of the superior courts of law or equity, or the High Court of Admiralty, for periods amounting together to fifteen years, or shall be afflicted with some permanent infirmity disabling him from the due execution of his office, which shall be distinctly recited in the said grant.

13. There shall be established for each of the districts specified in Schedule (A.) to this act, and at the places respectively mentioned in such schedule, a public registry attached to and under the control of the Court of Probate, hereinafter referred to as "the District Registry."

14. There shall be three registrars, two record keepers, and one sealer for the principal registry of the Court of Probate, and there shall be one district registrar for each district registry, hereinafter referred to as the district registrar, and there shall be so many clerks and other officers for the court and the principal registry as the judge of the court, with the sanction of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, may from time to time think fit: provided, that if at any time it appear to her Majesty in Council that the duties of the registrars of the principal registry of the Court of Probate can be performed by two registrars, it shall be lawful for her Majesty by Order in Council to direct that the number of registrars for such principal registry be reduced accordingly.

15. Charles Dyneley, Esq., John Iggulden, Esq., and William F. Gostling, Esq., the present deputy registrars of the Prerogative Court of Canterbury, shall, if willing to accept the office, be the first registrars of the principal registry of the Court of Probate; Joseph Todd and John Smith, the present record keepers of the said Prerogative Court, shall, if willing to accept the office, be the first record keepers at the said principal registry; and William John Berry, the present sealer of the said Prerogative Court, shall, if willing to accept the office, be the first sealer at the said principal registry; and George Jarvis Foster, clerk of the papers in the said Prerogative Court, shall, if willing to accept the office, be the first clerk of papers at the said principal registry.

16. The other clerks and officers now employed in the said Prerogative Court shall be transferred to such situations in the Court of Probate, and the principal registry thereof, as the Lord Chancellor may in that behalf direct, so that their duties may be such as, in the opinion of the said Lord Chancellor, may be as nearly as possible similar to those which they have heretofore discharged in the said Prerogative Court: provided always, that no such clerk or other officer shall be so transferred whom the said Lord Chancellor shall consider to be, from age, infirmity, or other cause, incompetent to the discharge of his duties.

17. The registrar or deputy registrar (as the case may be) now executing in person the duties of registrar of a diocesan or other court exercising testamentary jurisdiction at any place at which a district registry is to be established under this act, or where there is more than one such registrar or deputy registrar so acting, such one of them as the judge shall select, shall be appointed the first district registrar for such district, save where the judge shall consider such registrar or deputy registrar, or all such registrars or deputy registrars if more than one, to be, from age, infirmity, or other cause, incompetent to the discharge of the duties of district registrar: provided, that where there is now more than one such registrar or deputy registrar competent to the discharge of the duties, the judge may appoint them, or more than one of them, to hold such office of district registrar jointly, with benefit of survivorship.

18. The registrars, district registrars, and other officers of the Court of Probate, except as herein provided, shall be appointed by the judge: there shall be paid to the several officers mentioned in Schedule (B.) to this act the several salaries set opposite to their respective titles in the same schedule; and the said district registrars shall, for the performance of their duties under this act, including the services of any clerks they may employ, be entitled to take, in respect of the business in their respective district registries, such fees as shall be fixed as hereinafter provided; and, except as aforesaid, there shall be paid to the several clerks and other officers appointed under this act such salaries or other remuneration as the judge, with the consent of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, shall from time to time in each case direct.

19. The registrars and district registrars shall hold their offices during good behaviour, subject to be removed by order of the Lord Chancellor for some reasonable cause, to be in such order expressed; and the other officers of the court may be removed by the judge, with the sanction of the Lord Chancellor.

20. No person shall be appointed a registrar or district registrar who shall not be or have been an advocate, barrister-at-law, proctor, solicitor, or attorney-at-law, unless at the time of the passing of this act he is performing in person the duties of registrar or deputy registrar of some ecclesiastical court in England, or is acting as articled clerk or paid clerk to a proctor in Doctors' Commons, or as officer or clerk in the office of the said Prerogative Court, or of the Prerogative Court of York, or of any diocesan court.

21. All registrars, district registrars, officers, and clerks of the Court of Probate shall execute their respective offices in person, and not by deputy; and no registrar of the principal registry of the court, nor any officer or clerk in the principal registry thereof, shall during the time of his holding such office directly or indirectly practise as an advocate, barrister, proctor, solicitor, or attorney, or receive or participate in the fees of any other person so practising.

22. The judge shall cause to be made seals for the Court of Probate, that is to say, one seal to be used in its principal registry, and separate seals to be used in the several district registries, and may cause the same respectively from time to time to be broken, altered, and renewed, at his discretion; and all probates, letters of administration, orders, and other instruments, and exemplifications and copies thereof respectively, purporting to be sealed with any seal of the Court of Probate, shall in all parts of the United Kingdom be received in evidence, without further proof thereof.

23. The Court of Probate shall be a court of record, and such court shall have the same powers, and its grants and orders shall have the same effect throughout all England, and in relation to the personal estate in all parts of England of deceased persons, as the Prerogative Court of the Archbishop of Canterbury and its grants and orders respectively now have in the province of Canterbury, or in the parts of such province within its jurisdiction, and in relation to those matters and causes testamentary and those effects of deceased persons which are within the jurisdiction of the said Prerogative Court; and all duties which, by statute or otherwise, are imposed on or should be performed by ordinaries generally, or on or by the said Prerogative Court, in respect of probates, administrations, or matters or causes testamentary within their respective jurisdictions, shall be performed by the Court of Probate: provided, that no suits for legacies, or suits for the distribution of residues, shall be entertained by the court, or by any court or person whose jurisdiction as to matters and causes testamentary is hereby abolished.

24. The Court of Probate may require the attendance of any party in person, or of any person whom it may think fit to examine or cause to be examined in any suit or other proceeding in respect of matters or causes testamentary, and may examine or cause to be examined upon oath or affirmation, as the case may require, parties and witnesses by word of mouth, and may, either before or after, or with or without such examination, cause them, or any of them, to be examined on interrogatories, or receive their or any of their affidavits or solemn affirmations, as the case may be; and the court may by writ require such attendance, and order to be produced before itself or otherwise any deeds, evidences, or writings, in the same form, as nearly as may be, as that in which a writ of subpoena ad testificandum, or of subpoena duces tecum, is now issued by any of her Majesty's superior courts of law at Westminster; and every person disobeying any such writ shall be considered as in contempt of the court, and also be liable to forfeit a sum not exceeding 100*l*.

25. The Court of Probate shall have the like powers, jurisdiction, and authority for enforcing the attendance of persons required by it as aforesaid, and for punishing persons failing, neglecting, or refusing to produce deeds, evidences, or writings, or refusing to appear or to be sworn, or make affirmation or declaration, or to give evidence, or guilty of contempt, and generally for enforcing all orders, decrees, and judgments made or given by the court under this act, and otherwise in relation to the matters to be inquired into and done by or under the orders of the court under this act, as are by law vested in the High Court of Chancery for such purposes in relation to any suit or matter depending in such court.

26. The Court of Probate may, on motion or petition, or otherwise, in a summary way, whether any suit or other proceeding shall or shall not be pending in the court with respect to any probate or administration, order any person to produce and bring into the principal or any district registry, or otherwise, as the court may direct, any paper or writing, being or purporting to be testamentary, which may be shewn to be in the possession or under the control of such person; and if it be not shewn that any such paper or writing is in the possession or under the control of such person, but it shall appear that there are reasonable grounds for believing that he has the knowledge of any such paper or writing, the court may direct such person to attend for the purpose of being examined in open court, or upon interrogatories respecting the same, and such person shall be bound to answer such questions or interrogatories, and, if so ordered, to produce and bring in such paper or writing, and shall be subject to the like process of contempt in case of default in not attending, or in not answering such questions or interrogatories, or not bringing in such paper or writing, as he would have been subject to in case he had been a party to a suit in the court, and had made such default; and the costs of any such motion, petition, or other proceeding shall be in the discretion of the court.

27. The registrars and district registrars shall respectively have full power to administer oaths; and all persons who at the commencement of this act shall be acting as surrogates of any ecclesiastical court, and any other persons whom the judge shall under the seal of the court from time to time appoint, shall respectively have full power to administer oaths and perform such other duties in reference to matters and causes testamentary as may be assigned to them from time to time by the rules and orders under this act; and the persons so appointed shall be styled "Commissioners of her Majesty's Court of Probate:" provided, that any party required to be examined, or any person called as a witness or required or desiring to make an affidavit or deposition under or for the purposes of this act, shall be permitted to make his solemn affirmation or declaration, instead of being sworn, in the circumstances and manner in which a person called as a witness or desiring to make an affidavit or deposition would be permitted so to do under the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, in cases within the provisions of that act; and any person who shall wilfully give false evidence, or who shall wilfully swear, affirm, or declare falsely in any affidavit or deposition before the Court of Probate, or before any registrar, district registrar, or commissioner of the court, shall be liable to the penalties and consequences of wilful and corrupt perjury.

28. If any person forge the signature of any registrar, district registrar, or commissioner for taking oaths, or forge or counterfeit any seal of the Court of Probate, or knowingly use or concur in using any such forged or counterfeit signature or seal, or tender in evidence any document with a false or counterfeit signature of such registrar, district registrar, or commissioner, or with a false or counterfeit seal, knowing the same signature or seal to be false or counterfeit, every such person shall be guilty of felony, and shall upon conviction be liable to penal servitude for the term of his life, or any term not less than seven years, or to imprisonment for any term not exceeding three years, with or without hard labour.

29. The practice of the Court of Probate shall, except where otherwise provided by this act, or by the rules or orders to be from time to time made under this act, be, so far as the circumstances of the case will admit, according to the present practice in the Prerogative Court.

30. And to the intent and end that the procedure and practice of the court may be of the most simple and expeditious character, it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, at any time after the passing of this act, with the advice and assistance of the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench, or any one of the judges of the superior courts of law to be by such Chief Justice named in that behalf, and of the judge of the said Prerogative Court, to make rules and orders, to take effect when this act shall come into operation, for regulating the procedure and practice of the court, and the duties of the registrars, district registrars, and other officers thereof, and for determining what shall be deemed contentious and what shall be deemed non-contentious business, and, subject to the express provisions of this act, for fixing and regulating the time and manner of appealing from the decisions of the said court, and generally for carrying the provisions of this act into effect; and after the time when this act shall come into operation it shall be lawful for the judge of the Court of Probate from time to time, with the concurrence of the Lord Chancellor and the said Lord Chief Justice, or any one of the judges of the superior courts of law to be by such Chief Justice named in this behalf, to repeal, amend, add to, or alter any such rules and orders as to him, with such concurrence as aforesaid, may seem fit.

31. Subject to the regulations to be established by such rules and orders as aforesaid, the witnesses, and where necessary the parties, in all contentious matters, where their attendance can be had, shall be examined orally by or before the judge in open court: provided always, that, subject to any such regulations as aforesaid, the parties shall be at liberty to verify their respective cases, in whole or in part, by affidavit, but so that the deponent in every such affidavit shall, on the application of the opposite party, be subject to be cross-examined by or on behalf of such opposite party orally in open court as aforesaid, and after such cross-examination, may be re-examined orally in open court as aforesaid by or on behalf of the party by whom such affidavit was filed.

32. Provided, that where a witness in any such matter is out of the jurisdiction of the court, or where, by reason of his illness or otherwise, the court shall not think fit to enforce the attendance of the witness in open court, it shall be lawful for the court to order a commission to issue for the examination of such witness on oath, upon interrogatories or otherwise, or, if the witness be within the jurisdiction of the court, to order the examination of such witness on oath, upon interrogatories or otherwise, before any officer of the said court, or other person to be named in such order for the purpose; and all the powers given to the courts of law at Westminster by the acts of the 13 Geo. 3, c. 63, and the 1 Will. 4, c. 22, for enabling the courts of law at Westminster to issue commissions and give orders for the examination of witnesses in actions depending in such courts, and to enforce such examination, and all the provisions of the said acts and of any other acts for enforcing or otherwise applicable to such examination and the witnesses examined, shall extend and be applicable to the said Court of Probate and to the examination of witnesses under the commissions and orders of the said court, and to the witnesses examined, as if such court were one of the courts of law at Westminster, and the matter before it were an action pending in such court.

33. The rules of evidence observed in the superior courts of common law at Westminster shall be applicable to and observed in the trial of all questions of fact in the Court of Probate.

34. It shall be lawful for the judge of the Court of Probate to sit, with the assistance of any judge or judges of any of the superior courts of law at Westminster, who, upon the request of the judge of the Court of Probate, may find it convenient to attend for that purpose.

35. It shall be lawful for the Court of Probate to cause any question of fact arising in any suit or proceeding under this act to be tried by a special or common jury before the court itself, or by means of an issue to be directed to any of the superior courts of common law, in the same manner as an issue may now be directed by the Court of Chancery; and such question shall be so tried by a jury in any case where an heir-at-law, cited or otherwise made party to the suit or proceeding, makes application to the Court of Probate for that purpose; and in any other case where all the parties to the suit or proceeding concur in such an application, and where any party or parties other than such heir-at-law make a like application, (the other party or parties not concurring therein), and the court shall refuse to cause such question to be tried by a jury, such refusal of the court shall be subject to appeal, as herein provided.

36. When the court shall order a question of fact to be tried before itself by a jury, the court may make all such rules and orders upon the sheriff or any other person for procuring the attendance of a special or common jury for the trial of such question as may now be made by any of the superior courts of common law at Westminster, and may also make any other orders which to such court may seem requisite; and every such jury shall consist of persons possessing the qualifications, and shall be struck, summoned, balloted for, and called in like manner as if such jury were a jury for the trial of any cause in any of the said superior courts; and every juryman so summoned shall be entitled to the same rights, and subject to the same duties and liabilities, as if he had been duly summoned for the trial of any such cause in any of the said superior courts; and every party to any such proceeding shall be entitled to the same rights, as to challenge and otherwise, as if he were a party to any such cause; and generally for all purposes of or auxiliary to the trial of questions of fact by a jury before the court itself, and in respect of new trials thereof, and also for all purposes in relation to or consequential upon the direction of issues, the Court of Probate shall have the same jurisdiction, powers, and authority in all respects as belong to any superior court of common law, or to any judge thereof, or to the High Court of Chancery, or any judge thereof, for the like purposes.

37. When any such question shall be so ordered to be tried by a jury before the court itself, such question shall be reduced into writing in such form as the court shall direct, and at the trial the jury shall be sworn to try the said question, and a true verdict to give thereon, according to the evidence; and upon every such trial the Court of Probate shall have the same powers, jurisdiction, and authority as belong to any judge of any of the said superior courts sitting at Nisi Prius.

38. Where the Court of Probate directs an issue, it shall be lawful for such court to direct such issue to be tried either before a judge of assize in any county, or at the sittings for the trial of causes in London or Middlesex, and either by a special or common jury, in like manner as is now done by the Court of Chancery.

39. Any person considering himself aggrieved by any final or interlocutory decree or order of the Court of Probate may appeal therefrom to the House of Lords: provided always, that no appeal from any interlocutory order of the Court of Probate shall be made without leave of the Court of Probate first obtained; but on the hearing of an appeal from any final decree, all interlocutory orders complained of shall be considered as under appeal, as well as the final decree.

40. All persons who at the time of the passing of this act have been admitted advocates in any of the ecclesiastical courts shall be entitled to practise as advocates or counsel in all matters and causes whatsoever in the Court of Probate; and all serjeants and barristers-at-law shall be entitled to practise as advocates or counsel in all contentious matters and causes in the said court; and such persons who have been so admitted advocates and serjeants and barristers-at-law shall have respectively the same rank and precedence which they now have before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, unless and until her Majesty shall otherwise order.

41. All persons who at the time of the passing of this act have been admitted as advocates as aforesaid shall be entitled to practise as counsel in any of her Majesty's courts of law or equity in England, with the same eligibility to appointments, under acts of Parliament or otherwise, as if they had respectively been duly called to the degree of barrister-at-law on the days on which they respectively were so admitted as advocates, and with the same rank and precedence which they now have before the said Judicial Committee, unless and until her Majesty shall otherwise order.

42. Every person who at the time of the passing of this act is actually admitted and practising as a proctor in the courts in Doctors' Commons, or in the Prerogative Court of York, or in any diocesan court, or in any archidiaconal court, having previously duly served under articles of clerkship either to an attorney or proctor, may, upon his application, at any time within one year after the passing of this act, be admitted a proctor of the Court of Probate, without payment of any fee or stamp duty.

43. Every person who, at the time of the commencement of this act, is acting as registrar or deputy registrar of any ecclesiastical court, or is actually admitted and practising as a proctor in the courts in Doctors' Commons, or in any ecclesiastical court in England or Wales, may, within one year after the passing of this act, be admitted, without the payment of any stamp duty, fee, charge, or gratuity whatsoever, as a solicitor of the High Court of Chancery, upon the production of his appointment or admission as such registrar, deputy registrar, or proctor, or an official certificate thereof; and upon the production of an official certificate that such appointment or admission continued in force at the time of the passing of this act, and upon signing the roll of solicitors of the High Court of Chancery, but not otherwise, such person shall be entitled to be admitted as a solicitor of such court, and to be afterwards in like manner admitted and inrolled as an attorney of her Majesty's superior courts.

44. Every person who, at the time of the commencement of this act, has served or is actually serving as an articled clerk to a proctor entitled to take such articled clerk, and who has not been admitted as a proctor, shall be entitled to be admitted as a solicitor of the High Court of Chancery, in the same manner, and subject to the same rules and regulations, and upon the same conditions, as if he had before the commencement of this act been articled to a solicitor or to an attorney-at-law; and such admission shall entitle such articled clerk so admitted as a solicitor to be afterwards in like manner admitted and inrolled as an attorney of her Majesty's superior courts: provided, that if any such proctor to whom any such clerk is now articled shall retire from practice after the passing of this act, he shall and is hereby required to transfer such articled clerk to some other proctor, or to a solicitor, or to an attorney-at-law, for the unexpired term of his articles of clerkship; provided that the court shall at any time have the same power to transfer such clerk, during the unexpired term of his articles of clerkship, to any other proctor, or to a solicitor, or to an attorney-at-law, as the judge of the Prerogative Court now has in respect to clerks articled to proctors practising in the Court of Arches.

45. All solicitors and attornies-at-law may practise in the Court of Probate, and the laws and statutes now in force concerning solicitors and attornies shall extend to solicitors and attornies practising in the said court; and the commissioners for taking oaths in the High Court of Chancery shall be commissioners for taking oaths in the Court of Probate.

46. Probate of a will or letters of administration may, upon application for that purpose to the district registry, be granted in common form by the district registrar in the name of the Court of Probate, and under the seal appointed to be used in such district registry, if it shall appear by affidavit of the person, or some or one of the persons, applying for the same, that the testator or intestate, as the case may be, at the time of his death, had a fixed place of abode within the district in which the application is made, such place of abode being stated in the affidavit, and such probate or letters of administration shall have effect over the personal estate of the deceased in all parts of England accordingly.

47. Such affidavit shall be conclusive for the purpose of authorising the grant, by the district registrar, of probate or administration; and no such grant of probate or administration shall be liable to be recalled, revoked, or otherwise impeached by reason that the testator or intestate had no fixed place of abode within the district at the time of his death; and every probate and administration granted by any such district registrar shall effectually discharge and protect all persons paying to or dealing with any executor or administrator thereunder, notwithstanding the want of or defect in such affidavit, as is hereby required.

48. The district registrar shall not grant probate or administration in any case in which there is contention as to the grant until such contention is terminated or disposed of by decree or otherwise, or in which it otherwise appears to him that probate or administration ought not to be granted in common form.

49. Notice of every application to any district registrar for the grant of probate or administration shall be transmitted by such district registrar to the registrars of the principal registry by the next post after such application shall have been made; and such notice shall specify the name and description, or addition, (if any), of the testator or intestate, the time of his death, and the place of his abode at his decease, as stated in the affidavit made in support of such application, and the name of the person by whom the application has been made, and such other particulars as may be directed by rules or orders under this act; and no probate or administration shall be granted in pursuance of such application until such district registrar shall have received a certificate, under the hand of one of the registrars of the principal registry, that no other application appears to have been made in respect of the goods of the same deceased person, which certificate the said registrar of the principal registry shall forward as soon as may be to the district registrar: all such notices in respect of applications in the district registries shall be filed and kept in the principal registry, and the registrars of the principal registry shall, with reference to every such notice, examine all notices of such applications which may have been received from the several other district registries, and the applications which may have been made for grants of probate or administration at the principal registry, so far as it may appear necessary to ascertain whether or no application for probate or administration, in respect of the goods of the same deceased person, may have been made in more than one registry, and shall communicate with the district registrars as occasion may require in relation to such applications.

50. In every case where it appears to a district registrar that it is doubtful whether the probate or letters of administration which may be applied for should or should not be granted, or where any question arises in relation to the grant, or application for the grant, of any probate or administration, the district registrar shall transmit a statement of the matter in question to the registrars of the Court of Probate, who shall obtain the directions of the judge in relation thereto, and the judge may direct the district registrar to proceed in the matter of the application according to such instructions as to the judge may seem necessary, or may forbid any further proceeding by the district registrar in relation to the matter of such application, leaving the party applying for the grant in question to make application to the Court of Probate through its principal registry, or, if the case be within its jurisdiction, to a county court.

51. On the first Thursday of every month, or oftener if required by any rules or orders to be made in that behalf, every district registrar shall transmit to the registrars of the principal registry a list, in such form and containing such particulars as may be from time to time required by the Court of Probate, or by any rules or orders under this act, of the grants of probate and administration made by such district registrar up to the last preceding Saturday, and not included in a previous return, and also a copy, certified by the district registrar to be a correct copy, of every will to which any such probate or administration relates.

52. Every district registrar shall file and preserve all original wills, of which probate or letters of administration with the will annexed may be granted by him, in the public registry of the district, subject to such regulations as the judge of the Court of Probate may from time to time make in relation to the due preservation thereof, and the convenient inspection of the same.

53. Caveats against the grant of probates or administrations may be lodged in the principal registry or in any district registry, and (subject to any rules or orders under this act) the practice and procedure under such caveats in the Court of Probate shall, as near as may be, correspond with the practice and procedure under caveats now in use in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury; and immediately upon a caveat being lodged in any district registry, the district registrar shall send a copy thereof to the registrars to be entered among the caveats in the principal registry; and immediately upon a caveat being entered in the principal registry, notice thereof shall be given to the district registrar of the district, if any, in which it is alleged the deceased resided at the time of his decease, and to any other district registrar to whom it may appear to the registrars of the principal registry expedient to transmit the same.

54. Where it shall appear by affidavit of the person or some or one of the persons applying for probate or letters of administration that the testator or intestate had at the time of his death his fixed place of abode in one of the districts specified in Schedule (A.) to this act, and that the personal estate in respect of which such probate or letters of administration should be granted under this act, exclusive of what the deceased shall have been possessed of or entitled to as a trustee, and not beneficially, but without deducting anything on account of the debts due and owing from the deceased, is under the value of 200*l.*, and that the deceased at the time of his death was not seised or entitled beneficially of or to any real estate, or that the value of the real estate of or to which he was seised or entitled beneficially at the time of his death was under the value of 300*l.*, the judge of the county court having jurisdiction in the place in which it shall be sworn that the deceased had at the time of his death his fixed place of abode shall have the contentious jurisdiction and authority of the Court of Probate in respect of questions as to the grant and revocation of probate of the will or letters of administration of the effects of such deceased person, in case there be any contention in relation thereto.

55. On a decree being made by a judge of a county court for the grant or revocation of a probate or administration in any such cause, the registrar of the county court shall transmit to the district registrar of the district in which it shall have been sworn that the deceased had at the time of his decease his fixed place of abode a certificate under the seal of the county court of such decree having been made, and thereupon, on the application of the party or parties in favour of whom such decree shall have been made, a probate or administration in compliance with such decree shall be issued from such district registry; or, as the case may require, the probate or letters of administration theretofore granted shall be recalled or varied by the district registrar, according to the effect of such decree.

56. The judge of any county court before whom any disputed question shall be raised relating to matters and causes testamentary under this act shall, subject to the rules and orders under this act, have all the jurisdiction, power, and authority to decide the same, and enforce judgment therein, and to enforce orders in relation thereto, as if the same had been an ordinary action in the county court.

57. The affidavit as to the place of abode and state of the property of a testator or intestate which is to give contentious jurisdiction to the judge of a county court under the previous provisions shall, except as hereinafter provided, be conclusive for the purpose of authorising the exercise of such jurisdiction, and the grant or revocation of probate or administration, in compliance with the decree of such judge; and no such grant of probate or administration shall be liable to be recalled, revoked, or otherwise impeached by reason that the testator or intestate had no fixed place of abode within the jurisdiction of such judge, or within any of the said districts, at the time of his death, or by reason that the personal estate, sworn to be under the value of 200*l.*, did in fact amount to or exceed that value, or that the value of the real estate of or to which the deceased was seised or entitled beneficially at the time of his death amounted to or exceeded 300*l.*: provided, that where it shall be shewn to the judge of a county court before whom any matter is pending under this act that the place of abode or state of the property of the testator or intestate in respect of whose will or estate he may have been applied to for grant or revocation of probate or administration has not been correctly stated in the affidavit, and if correctly stated would not have authorised him to exercise such contentious jurisdiction, he shall stay all further proceedings in his court in the matter, leaving any party to apply to the Court of Probate for such grant or revocation, and making such order as to costs of the proceedings before him as he may think just.

58. Any party who shall be dissatisfied with the determination of the judge of the county court in point of law, or upon the admission or rejection of any evidence in any matter or cause under this act, may appeal from the same to the Court of Probate, in such manner and subject to such regulations as may be provided by the rules and orders to be made under this act, and the decision of the Court of Probate on such appeal shall be final.

59. It shall not be obligatory on any person to apply for probate or administration to any district registry, or through any county court, but in every case such application may be made through the principal registry of the Court of Probate, wherever the testator or intestate may at the time of his death have had his fixed place of abode: provided, that where, in any contentious matter arising out of any such application, it is shewn to the Court of Probate that the state of the property and place of abode of the deceased were such as to give contentious jurisdiction to the judge of a county court, the Court of Probate may send the cause to such county court, and the judge thereof shall proceed therein as if such application and cause had been made to and arisen in his court in the first instance.

60. For regulating the procedure and practice of the county courts, and the judges, registrars, and officers thereof, in relation to their jurisdiction and proceedings under this act, rules and orders may be from time to time framed, amended, and certified by the county court judges appointed for the time being to frame rules and orders for regulating the practice of the county courts under the act of the session holden in the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 108, and shall be subject to be allowed or disallowed or altered, and shall be in force from the day named for that purpose by the Lord Chancellor, as in the said act is provided in relation to other rules and orders regulating the practice of the same courts; and for establishing rules and orders to be in force when this act comes into operation, the power given by this enactment shall be exercised as soon as conveniently may be after the passing of this act.

61. Where proceedings are taken under this act for proving a will in solemn form, or for revoking the probate of a will on the ground of the invalidity thereof, or where in any other contentious cause or matter under this act the validity of a will is disputed, unless in the several cases aforesaid the will affects only personal estate, the heir-at-law, devisees, and other persons having or pretending interest in the real estate affected by the will, shall, subject to the provisions of this act, and to the rules and orders under this act, be cited to see proceedings, or otherwise summoned, in like manner as the next of kin or others having or pretending interest in the personal estate affected by a will should be cited or summoned, and may be permitted to become parties, or intervene for their respective interests in such real estate, subject to such rules and orders, and to the discretion of the court.

62. Where probate of such will is granted after such proof in solemn form, or where the validity of the will is otherwise declared by the decree or order in such contentious cause or matter as aforesaid, the probate, decree, or order respectively shall enure for the benefit of all persons interested in the real estate affected by such will, and the probate copy of such will, or the letters of administration with such will annexed, or a copy thereof respectively, stamped with the seal of her Majesty's Court of Probate, shall in all courts, and in all suits and proceedings affecting real estate, of whatever tenure, (save proceedings by way of appeal under this act, or for the revocation of such probate or administration), be received as conclusive evidence of the validity and contents of such will, in like manner as a probate is received in evidence in matters relating to the personal estate; and where probate is refused or revoked, on the ground of the invalidity of the will, or the invalidity of the will is otherwise declared by decree or order under this act, such decree or order shall enure for the benefit of the heir-at-law or other persons against whose interest in real estate such will might operate, and such will shall not be received in evidence in any suit or proceeding in relation to real estate, save in any proceeding by way of appeal from such decrees or orders.

63. Nothing herein contained shall make it necessary to cite the heir-at-law or other persons having or pretending interest in the real estate of a deceased person, unless it is shewn to the court, and the court is satisfied, that the deceased was at the time of his decease seised of, or entitled to, or had power to appoint by will, some real estate beneficially, or in any case where the will propounded, or of which the validity is in question, would not in the opinion of the court, though established as to personalty, affect real estate; but in every such case, and in any other case in which the court may, with reference to the circumstances of the property of the deceased or otherwise, think fit, the court may proceed without citing the heir or other persons interested in real estate: provided, that the probate, decree, or order of the court shall not in any case affect the heir or any person in respect of his interest in real estate, unless such heir or person has been cited or made party to the proceedings, or derives title under or through a person so cited or made party.

64. In any action at law or suit in equity, where, according to the existing law, it would be necessary to produce and prove an original will in order to establish a devise or other testamentary disposition of or affecting real estate, it shall be lawful for the party intending to establish in proof such devise or other testamentary disposition to give to the opposite party, ten days at least before the trial or other proceeding in which the said proof shall be intended to be adduced, notice that he intends at the said trial or other proceeding to give in evidence, as proof of the devise or other testamentary disposition, the probate of the said will, or the letters of administration with the will annexed, or a copy thereof stamped with any seal of the Court of Probate; and in every such case such probate or letters of administration, or copy thereof respectively, stamped as aforesaid, shall be sufficient evidence of such will and of its validity and contents, notwithstanding the same may not have been proved in solemn form, or have been otherwise declared valid in a contentious cause or matter, as herein provided, unless the party receiving such notice shall, within four days after such receipt, give notice that he disputes the validity of such devise or other testamentary disposition.

65. In every case in which, in any such action or suit, the original will shall be produced and proved, it shall be lawful for the court or judge before whom such evidence shall be given to direct by which of the parties the costs thereof shall be paid.

66. There shall be one place of deposit, under the control of the Court of Probate, at such place in London or Middlesex as her Majesty may by Order in Council direct, in which all the original wills brought into the court, or of which probate or administration with the will annexed is granted under this act in the principal registry thereof, and copies of all wills, the originals whereof are to be preserved in the district registries, and such other documents as the court may direct, shall be deposited and preserved, and may be inspected under the control of the court, and subject to the rules and orders under this act.

67. The judge shall cause to be made from time to time in the principal registry of the Court of Probate calendars of the grants of probate and administration in the principal registry, and in the several district registries of the court, for such periods as the judge may think fit, each such calendar to contain a note of every probate or administration with the will annexed granted within the period therein specified, and also a note of every other administration granted within the same period, such respective notes setting forth the dates of such grants, the registry in which the grants were made, the names of the testators and intestates, the place and time of death, the names and descriptions of the executors and administrators, and the value of the effects; and the calendars to be so made shall be printed as the same are from time to time completed.

68. The registrars shall cause a printed copy of every calendar to be transmitted, through the post or otherwise, to each of the district registries, and to the office of her Majesty's Prerogative in Dublin, the office of the commissary of the county of Midlothian in Edinburgh, and such other offices, if any, as the Court of Probate shall from time to time by rule or order direct; and every printed copy of a calendar so transmitted as aforesaid shall be kept in the registry or office to which it is transmitted, and may be inspected by any person on payment of a fee of 1*s*. for each search, without reference to the number of calendars inspected.

69. An official copy of the whole or any part of a will, or an official certificate of the grant of any letters of administration, may be obtained from the registry or district registry where the will has been proved or the administration granted, on the payment of such fees as shall be fixed for the same by the rules and orders under this act.

70. Pending any suit touching the validity of the will of any deceased person, or for obtaining, recalling, or revoking any probate or any grant of administration, the Court of Probate may appoint an administrator of the personal estate of such deceased person; and the administrator so appointed shall have all the rights and powers of a general administrator, other than the right of distributing the residue of such personal estate; and every such administrator shall be subject to the immediate control of the court, and act under its direction.

71. It shall be lawful for the Court of Probate to appoint any administrator appointed as aforesaid, or any other person, to be receiver of the real estate of any deceased person pending any suit in the court touching the validity of any will of such deceased person by which his real estate may be affected, and such receiver shall have such power to receive all rents and profits of such real estate, and such powers of letting and managing such real estate, as the court may direct.

72. The Court of Probate may direct that administrators and receivers, appointed pending suits involving matters and causes testamentary, shall receive out of the personal and real estate of the deceased such reasonable remuneration as the court think fit.

73. Where a person has died or shall die wholly intestate as to his personal estate, or leaving a will affecting personal estate, but without having appointed an executor thereof willing and competent to take probate, or where the executor shall at the time of the death of such person be resident out of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and it shall appear to the court to be necessary or convenient in any such case, by reason of the insolvency of the estate of the deceased, or other special circumstances, to appoint some person to be the administrator of the personal estate of the deceased, or of any part of such personal estate, other than the person who, if this act had not been passed, would by law have been entitled to a grant of administration of such personal estate, it shall not be obligatory upon the court to grant administration of the personal estate of such deceased person to the person who, if this act had not passed, would by law have been entitled to a grant thereof, but it shall be lawful for the court, in its discretion, to appoint such person as the court shall think fit to be such administrator, upon his giving such security, if any, as the court shall direct, and every such administration may be limited as the court shall think fit.

74. The provisions of an act passed in the 38 Geo. 3, c. 87, shall apply (in like manner) to all cases where letters of administration have been granted, and the person to whom such administration shall have been granted shall be out of the jurisdiction of her Majesty's courts of law and equity.

75. After any grant of administration no person shall have power to sue or prosecute any suit, or otherwise act as executor of the deceased, as to the personal estate comprised in or affected by such grant of administration, until such administration shall have been recalled or revoked.

76. Where, before the revocation of any temporary administration, any proceedings at law or in equity have been commenced by or against any administrator so appointed, the court in which such proceedings are pending may order that a suggestion be made upon the record of the revocation of such administration, and of the grant of probate or administration which shall have been made consequent thereupon, and that the proceedings shall be continued in the name of the new executor or administrator, in like manner as if the proceeding had been originally commenced by or against such new executor or administrator, but subject to such conditions and variations, if any, as such court may direct.

77. Where any probate or administration is revoked under this act all payments bonâ fide made to any executor or administrator under such probate or administration, before the revocation thereof, shall be a legal discharge to the person making the same; and the executor or administrator who shall have acted under any such revoked probate or administration may retain and reimburse himself in respect of any payments made by him which the person to whom probate or administration shall be afterwards granted might have lawfully made.

78. All persons and corporations making or permitting to be made any payment or transfer bonâ fide, upon any probate or letters or administration granted in respect of the estate of any deceased person under the authority of this act, shall be indemnified and protected in so doing, notwithstanding any defect or circumstance whatsoever affecting the validity of such probate or letters of administration.

79. Where any person, after the commencement of this act, renounces probate of the will of which he is appointed executor or one of the executors, the rights of such person in respect of the executorship shall wholly cease, and the representation to the testator and the administration of his effects shall and may, without any further renunciation, go, devolve, and be committed in like manner as if such person had not been appointed executor.

80. So much of an act passed in the 21 Hen. 8, c. 5, and of an act passed in the 22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 10, and of an act passed in the 1 Jac. 2, c. 17, as requires any surety, bond, or other security to be taken from a person to whom administration shall be committed, shall be repealed.

81. Every person to whom any grant of administration shall be committed shall give bond to the judge of the Court of Probate, to enure for the benefit of the judge for the time being, and, if the Court of Probate or (in the case of a grant from the district registry) the district registrar shall require, with one or more surety or sureties, conditioned for duly collecting, getting in, and administering the personal estate of the deceased, which bond shall be in such form as the judge shall from time to time by any general or special order direct: provided, that it shall not be necessary for the solicitor for the affairs of the Treasury, or the solicitor of the Duchy of Lancaster, applying for or obtaining administration to the use or benefit of her Majesty, to give any such bond as aforesaid.

82. Such bond shall be in a penalty of double the amount under which the estate and effects of the deceased shall be sworn, unless the court or district registrar, as the case may be, shall in any case think fit to direct the same to be reduced, in which case it shall be lawful for the court or district registrar so to do, and the court or district registrar may also direct that more bonds than one shall be given, so as to limit the liability of any surety to such amount as the court or district registrar shall think reasonable.

83. The court may, on application made on motion or petition in a summary way, and on being satisfied that the condition of any such bond has been broken, order one of the registrars of the court to assign the same to some person to be named in such order, and such person, his executors or administrators, shall thereupon be entitled to sue on the said bond, in his own name, both at law and in equity, as if the same had been originally given to him instead of to the judge of the court, and shall be entitled to recover thereon, as trustee for all persons interested, the full amount recoverable in respect of any breach of the condition of the said bond.

84. All suits, whether original or by way of appeal, which at the commencement of this act shall be pending in any court in England respecting any grant of probate or administration, shall be transferred, with all the proceedings therein, to the Court of Probate, there to be dealt with and decided according to the rules and practice of the said court, except so far as such court may think it expedient to adopt, for the purposes of such transferred suits or any of them, the rules or practice of the court in which the same shall have been pending, to which end the Court of Probate shall, for the purposes of such suits, have all the jurisdiction, power, and authority possessed by the court from which such suit shall be transferred; but this enactment shall not apply to proceedings by way of appeal pending before her Majesty in Council, which proceedings shall be carried on and prosecuted in the same manner in all respects as if this act had not passed; and every person who if this act had not passed might have appealed to her Majesty in Council against any proceeding, decree, or sentence of any court respecting the grant of any probate or administration may, notwithstanding this act, appeal to her Majesty in Council against such proceeding, decree, or sentence: provided also, that her Majesty in Council may remit to the Court of Probate any cause or proceeding pending by way of appeal as aforesaid, or to be brought before her Majesty in Council upon appeal as aforesaid, with such directions as the justice of the case may require.

85. Provided, that if at the commencement of this act any cause which would be transferred to the Court of Probate under the enactment hereinbefore contained shall have been heard before any judge having jurisdiction in relation to such cause before the commencement of this act, and shall be standing for judgment, such judge may, at any time within six weeks after the commencement of this act, give in to one of the registrars of the court a written judgment thereon, signed by him, and a decree or order, as the case may require, shall be drawn up in pursuance of such judgment; and every such decree or order shall have the same force and effect as if it had been drawn up in pursuance of a judgment of the Court of Probate on the day on which the same shall so be delivered to the registrar, and shall be subject to appeal under this act.

86. All grants of probates and administrations made before the commencement of this act, which may be void or voidable by reason only that the courts from which respectively the same were obtained had not jurisdiction to make such grants, shall be as valid as if the same had been obtained from courts entitled to make such grants: provided, that any such grants of probate or administration shall not be made valid by this act when the same shall before the commencement of this act have been revoked, or determined by any court of competent jurisdiction to have been void; nor shall this act prejudice or affect any proceedings pending at the time of the passing of this act in which the validity of any such probate or administration shall be in question: if the result of such proceedings shall be to invalidate the same, such probate or administration shall not be rendered valid by this act; and if such proceedings abate or become defective by reason of the death of any party, any person who but for this act would have any right by reason of the invalidity of such probate or administration shall retain such right, and may commence proceedings for enforcing the same within six calendar months after the death of such party.

87. Legal grants of probate and administration made before the commencement of this act, and grants of probate and administration made legal by this act, shall have the same force and effect as if they had been granted under this act, but in every such case there shall be due and payable to her Majesty such further stamp duty, if any, as would have been chargeable on any probate or administration which but for this act would or ought to have been obtained in respect of the personal estate not covered by the grant; and all inventories and accounts in respect thereof shall be returnable to the Court of Chancery, and all bonds taken in respect thereof may be enforced by or under the authority of the Court of Chancery, at the discretion of the court.

88. Provided, that where any probate or administration has been granted before the commencement of this act, and the deceased had personal estate in England not within the limits of the jurisdiction of the court by which the probate or administration was granted, or otherwise not within the operation of the grant, it shall be lawful for the Court of Probate to grant probate or administration only in respect of such personal estate not covered by any former probate or administration, and such grant may be limited accordingly.

89. The acting judge and registrar of every court, and other person now having jurisdiction to grant probate or administration, and every person having the custody of the documents and papers of or belonging to such court or person, shall, upon receiving a requisition for that purpose, under the seal of the Court of Probate, from a registrar, and at the time and in the manner mentioned in such requisition, transmit to the Court of Probate, or to such other place as in such requisition shall be specified, all records, wills, grants, probates, letters of administration, administration bonds, notes of administration, court books, calendars, deeds, processes, acts, proceedings, writs, documents, and every other instrument relating exclusively or principally to matters or causes testamentary, to be deposited and arranged in the registry of each district or in the principal registry, as the case may require, so as to be easy of reference, under the control and direction of the court.

90. No judge, registrar, or other person who shall wilfully refuse or neglect so to transmit such records, wills, grants, probates, letters of administration, administration bonds, notes of administration, court books, calendars, deeds, processes, acts, proceedings, writs, documents, or any other instrument relating to matters or causes testamentary, shall be entitled to any compensation under this act; and every judge, registrar, or other person so refusing or neglecting shall be liable to a penalty of 100*l*., to be sued for and recovered, together with full costs of suit, in any of her Majesty's superior courts, by the registrars.

91. One or more safe and convenient depository or depositories shall be provided, under the control and directions of the Court of Probate, for all such wills of living persons as shall be deposited therein for safe custody; and all persons may deposit their wills in such depository, upon payment of such fees and under such regulations as the judge shall from time to time by any order direct.

92. Nothing in this act contained shall affect the stamp duties now by law payable upon probates and administrations; and all the clauses, provisions, rules, regulations, and directions contained in any act of Parliament relating to the said duties, and to wills, probates of wills, and letters of administration, for securing the said duties, not superseded by or inconsistent with the express provisions of this act, shall be in full force, and shall be observed, applied, and put in execution for securing the duties payable on probates of wills and letters of administration granted under this act, as if such duties had been granted by this act, and the said clauses, provisions, rules, and regulations relating thereto were herein repeated and specially enacted.

93. The registrars of the Court of Probate shall, within such period as the judge shall direct after probate of any will or letters of administration shall have been granted, deliver or cause to be delivered to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, or their proper officer, the following documents respectively; that is to say, in the case of a probate or administration with a will annexed, a copy of the will and the original affidavit; and in the case of letters of administration without a will annexed, such original affidavit; and in every case of letters of administration, a copy or extract thereof; and in every case, such certificate or note of the grant as the said commissioners may require.

94. Whereas, by an act passed in the 53 Geo. 3, c. 127, it is enacted, that if any proctor of any ecclesiastical court shall act as such, or permit his name to be used in any suit appertaining to the office of a proctor, or in obtaining probates of wills or letters of administration, for or on account or for the profit or benefit of any person not entitled to act as a proctor, or shall permit any such person to participate in such profit or benefit, such proctor shall be subject to certain penalties therein mentioned; and it is also therein further enacted, that if any person shall, in his own name, or in that of any other person, do or perform any act whatever belonging to the office of a proctor in consideration of any gain, fee, or reward, or with a view to participate in the benefit to be derived from the office, functions, or practice of a proctor, without being admitted and inrolled, every such person shall be subject to certain other penalties therein mentioned: be it enacted, that nothing in the said act contained shall prevent any proctor of the Court of Probate from acting as agent of any attorney or solicitor in relation to any matter testamentary, or from allowing him to participate in the profits of and incident thereto.

95. The Lord Chancellor, with such assistance as is hereinbefore provided as to rules and orders to be made in pursuance of this act, shall, as soon as conveniently may be after the passing of this act, fix a table or tables of fees to be taken by the officers of the Court of Probate, and the proctors, solicitors, and attornies practising therein, including the district registrars, and the proctors, solicitors, and attornies practising in district registries, and of fees to be taken by the officers of the county courts, in respect of business under this act, and of fees to be payable in respect of searches, inspection, and printed and other copies of and extracts from records, wills, and other documents in the custody or under the control of the Court of Probate; and the judge of the Court of Probate, with such concurrence as is hereinbefore provided in respect of the amendment of rules and orders, is hereby empowered, from time to time after this act shall come into operation, to add to, reduce, alter, or amend such table or table of fees, as he may see fit: provided, that such tables of fees, and every alteration of the same, except so far as respects the fees which are to be taken by district registrars, proctors, and others, for their own remuneration and to their own use, shall be subject to the approval of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury; and every such table of fees, and every addition, reduction, alteration, or amendment to, in, or of the same, shall be published in the London Gazette; and no other fees than those specified and allowed in such tables of fees shall be demanded or taken by such officers, and proctors, solicitors, and attornies.

96. The bill of any proctor, attorney, or solicitor, for any fees, charges, or disbursements in respect of any business transacted in the Court of Probate, whether contentious or otherwise, or any matters connected therewith, shall, as well between proctor or attorney or solicitor and client as between party and party, be subject to taxation by any one of the registrars of the said court; and the mode in which any such bill shall be referred for taxation, and by whom the costs of taxation shall be paid, shall be regulated by the rules and orders to be made under this act; and the certificate of the registrar of the amount at which such bill is taxed shall be subject to appeal to the judge of the said court.

97. None of the fees payable to the officers of the Court of Probate, or of any county court, in respect of business under this act, except the fees of the district registrars, (which are to be taken as their remuneration and for their own use), the fees of proctors, solicitors, and attornies, and such fees as may be authorised to be taken for their own use by surrogates and commissioners for administering oaths, shall be received in money, but every such fee shall be collected and received by a stamp denoting the amount of the fee which otherwise would be payable.

98. The fees to be collected by means of stamps under the provisions of this act shall be deemed "stamp duties," and shall be placed under the management of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, to be collected and paid into the Exchequer under the same laws and regulations as those made in respect of the other duties of "stamps," and the provisions in the several acts for the time being in force relating to stamps under the care or management of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue shall in all cases not hereby expressly provided for be of full force and effect with respect to the stamps to be provided under or by virtue of this act, and to the vellum, parchment, or paper on or to which the same stamps shall be impressed or affixed, and be applied and put in execution for collecting and securing the sums of money denoted thereby, and for preventing, detecting, and punishing all frauds, forgeries, and other offences relating thereto, as fully and effectually to all intents and purposes as if such provisions had been herein repeated and specially enacted with reference to the said last-mentioned stamps and sums of money respectively; but a separate and distinct account of all money received in respect of the said last-mentioned stamps for every year ending the 31st March shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament within one month after the termination of such year of accounts, or, if Parliament be not then sitting, within one month after the commencement of the next session of Parliament.

99. No document which under this act, and any table of fees for the time being in force under this act, ought to have a stamp in respect of such fee impressed thereon or affixed thereto, shall be received, or filed, or be used in relation to any proceeding in the Court of Probate, or be of any validity for any purpose whatsoever, unless or until the same shall have the proper stamp impressed thereon or affixed thereto: provided, that if at any time it shall appear that any such document has through mistake or inadvertence been received, or filed, or used without having such stamp impressed thereon or affixed thereto, it shall be lawful for the judge of the Court of Probate, if he think fit, to order that such stamp shall be impressed thereon or affixed thereto; and thereupon, when a stamp shall have been impressed on such document or affixed thereto in compliance with any such order, such document, and every proceeding in reference thereto, shall be as valid and effectual as if such stamp had been impressed thereon or affixed thereto in the first instance.

100. If any officer of the Court of Probate, or any other person employed under this act, shall do or commit or connive at any fraudulent act or practice in relation to any stamp to be used under the provisions of this act, or to any fee or sum of money to be collected, or which ought to be collected, by means of any such stamp, or if any such officer or person shall be guilty of any wilful act, neglect, or omission whereby any fee or money which ought to be collected by means of a stamp under this act shall be lost, or the payment thereof evaded, every such officer or person so offending shall be dismissed from his office or employment if the judge of the Court of Probate shall think fit so to order.

101. The salary of the judge of the Court of Probate, and any retiring annuity granted to a judge of the Court of Probate under this act, and all compensations payable under this act, shall be charged on and payable out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom.

102. It shall be lawful for the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, out of such monies as may be provided and appropriated by Parliament for the purpose, to cause to be paid all salaries payable to the registrars, clerks, and other officers under this act, and all necessary expenses of the Court of Probate and its registries, and other expenses which may be incurred in carrying the provisions of this act into effect, (except such salary, retiring annuity, and compensations as are hereinbefore charged on the said Consolidated Fund).

103. It shall be lawful for the Commissioners of the Treasury to grant to any archdeacons, judges, deputy judges, registrars, deputy registrars, and other persons holding office in the courts now exercising jurisdiction in matters and causes testamentary, who may sustain any loss of emoluments by reason of the passing of this act, and who are not transferred or appointed by or under this act to offices of equal value in the Court of Probate, such compensation as, having regard to the tenure of their respective offices and appointments, and to the provisions of the act of the session holden in the 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 77, s. 25, and of the act of the session holden in the 10 & 11 Vict. c. 98, s. 9, and the several subsequent acts continuing the provisions of the said acts respectively, the said commissioners deem just and proper to be awarded: provided, that where persons, whose claims in respect of offices held for life or otherwise are excluded by the said provisions, have executed in person the duties of such offices, the said provisions shall not be deemed to prevent the said commissioners from granting to such persons such compensation as the said commissioners would deem just and proper to be awarded on the abolition or reduction of the emoluments of like offices if held at the pleasure of the Crown; and it shall be lawful for the said commissioners to grant to all managing and other clerks who have been continuously employed in the offices of registrars of the said courts for fifteen years and upwards immediately before the passing of this act, and may sustain any loss of emoluments as aforesaid, and are not transferred or appointed as aforesaid, such compensation as the said commissioners may deem just and proper: provided always, that if any person to whom any yearly sum is awarded for compensation as aforesaid is or shall be appointed to any office or situation under this act, or in the public service, the payment of such compensation shall be suspended so long as he continues to receive the salary or emoluments of such office or situation, if the amount thereof be equal to or greater than the amount of emoluments in respect of the loss whereof compensation is awarded; and if the amount of such last-mentioned emoluments be greater than the salary or emoluments of such office or situation, no more of such compensation shall be paid than will, with such salary or emoluments, be equal to the emoluments in respect of the loss whereof such compensation is payable.

104. Any person to whom compensation is awarded under this act in respect of the loss of emoluments of any office, and who at the passing of this act shall have been discharging or liable to discharge in respect of such office duties other than those in matters and causes testamentary, shall, so long as he shall receive such compensation, be bound to discharge such other duties on the same terms on which, whether gratuitously or otherwise, he discharged or was liable to discharge the same before the passing of this act.

105. Whereas the fees or emoluments of the persons now practising as proctors in the courts now exercising jurisdiction in matters and causes testamentary may be damaged by the abolition of the exclusive rights and privileges which they have hitherto enjoyed as such proctors in such courts: be it enacted, that the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, by examination on oath or otherwise, which oath they are hereby authorised to administer, may inquire into, and may, by the production of such evidence as they shall think fit to require, ascertain and absolutely determine, the net annual amount of the profits arising from the transaction of business by proctors in matters and causes testamentary, on an average of five years immediately preceding the commencement of this act, or of such proportion of five years as shall have elapsed since each and every such proctor was admitted to practise in such courts, and shall award to each and every such proctor a sum of money or annual payment during the term of his natural life, of such amount as shall be equal in value to one-half of the net profits derived by such proctor in respect of matters and causes testamentary upon the said average of five years immediately preceding the commencement of this act, or of such proportion of the said five years as shall have elapsed since the admission of each and every such proctor to practise in the courts now exercising jurisdiction in matters and causes testamentary.

106. And whereas divers proctors practising in the courts now exercising jurisdiction in matters and causes testamentary now are or may at the commencement of this act be associated together in partnership: be it therefore enacted, that in all such cases the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall inquire into and ascertain the terms or conditions of such partnerships, and shall absolutely determine and award compensation in respect thereof as hereinbefore provided to each of such partnerships, in like manner as if all the emoluments thereof had been derived by one individual, and shall apportion such compensation among the members of each such partnership, with or without benefit of survivorship, regard being had to the existing terms and conditions of the same.

107. And whereas the Most Reverend Charles late Archbishop of Canterbury, by virtue of the power given by an act of the 9 Geo. 4, "to authorise the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury for the time being to appoint a person or persons to the office of registrar of his Prerogative, without a previous surrender of the existing grant or grants of the said office," did, by letters-patent under his archiepiscopal seal, dated the 21st June, 1828, with the confirmation of the dean and chapter of the cathedral and metropolitical church of Christ, Canterbury, grant the said office of registrar of his Prerogative to the Right Hon. Charles Manners Sutton, now Viscount Canterbury, then Charles Manners Sutton, Esq., the eldest son and next heir male of the Right Hon. Charles Manners Sutton, late Viscount Canterbury, for his life, subject and without prejudice to the estates and interests, rights and privileges, of the Rev. George Moore and Robert Moore, (who then held the said office by virtue of such grant as therein mentioned), and the survivor of them: and whereas, by an act passed in the session of Parliament held in the 2 & 3 Will. 4, [c. 109], intituled "An Act for settling and securing Annuities on the Right Hon. Charles Manners Sutton, and on his next Heir Male, in consideration of the eminent Services of the said Right Hon. Charles Matters Sutton," it was enacted, that an annuity of 4000*l.* should be payable out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland to the said Right Hon. Charles Manners Sutton, late Viscount Canterbury, during his life, and that after the decease of the said Charles late Viscount Canterbury one annuity of 3000*l.* be payable out of the said Consolidated Fund to the then heir male of the body of the said Charles late Viscount Canterbury, during the natural life of such heir male; and it was further enacted, that in the event of the said Charles now Viscount Canterbury having succeeded to and being in the possession of the said annuity of 3000*l.*, and afterwards becoming entitled to the full possession of the said office of registrar of the Prerogative of the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, and to the fees, perquisites, profits, and emoluments thereof, (provided the same should exceed the annual sum of 3000*l.*), then and in either of the cases aforesaid the said annuity of 3000*l.* should cease and determine, and be no longer payable to the said Charles now Viscount Canterbury; provided nevertheless, that if the said fees, perquisites, profits, and emoluments of the said office of registrar should not produce the net annual sum of 3000*l.* to the said Charles now Viscount Canterbury, then there should be issued and paid out of the said Consolidated Fund such a sum of money annually as, together with the said fees, perquisities, profits, and emoluments, would make a clear annual income to the said Charles now Viscount Canterbury of 3000*l.*: and whereas the said Charles now Viscount Canterbury, upon the decease of the said Charles late Viscount Canterbury, succeeded to and is now in possession of the annuity of 3000*l.*, but he is not yet in possession of the said office of registrar: there shall be awarded to the said Charles now Viscount Canterbury, as a compensation for the fees, perquisites, profits, and emoluments of the said office of registrar of the Prerogative of the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, an annuity to be calculated upon the average yearly net receipts of the legal fees, perquisites, profits, and emoluments of the said office during such period next preceding the time when this act shall come into operation as the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall think proper; and such annuity shall commence from the time of this act coming into operation, if the said Charles Viscount Canterbury shall then be in possession of the said office, and if not, then from the time at which the said Charles Viscount Canterbury would have become entitled, but for the passing of this act, to the full possession of the said office, and to the receipt of the fees, perquisites, profits, and emoluments thereof, and shall be paid to the said Charles Viscount Canterbury thenceforth during his life: provided, that if the said annuity by way of compensation shall exceed the annual sum of 3000*l.*, then the said annuity of 3000*l.* payable under the last-recited act to the said Charles Viscount Canterbury shall, from and after the commencement of the said annuity by way of compensation, cease and determine, and shall not be payable to the said Charles Viscount Canterbury; and in case the annuity awarded by way of compensation shall be less than the net annual sum of 3000*l.*, the provision contained in the said recited act passed in the session of Parliament held in the 2 & 3 Will. 4, for the payment unto the heir male of the body of the said Charles Viscount Canterbury, out of the said Consolidated Fund, of such a sum of money annually as, together with the said fees, perquisites, profits, and emoluments, would make up a clear income to him of 3000*l.*, shall, from and after the commencement of the said annuity by way of compensation, be applicable to and be in force for the purpose of making up, together with the said annuity so to be awarded in lieu of such fees, perquisites, profits, and emoluments as aforesaid, a clear annual income of 3000*l.* to the said Charles now Viscount Canterbury during his life.

108. All the claim, title, and interest which at the time of the passing of this act the Rev. Robert Moore, clerk, has or is entitled to in or in respect of the building at present used as the Public Registry of the Prerogative Court, shall at the time appointed for the commencement of this act vest in the registrars for the time being of the court, subject to the payment of such rents, and the performance and fulfilment of such contracts in respect thereof, as the said Robert Moore, his executors or administrators, shall be subject to at the time of such vesting.

109. In case Sir John Dodson, the present judge of the Prerogative Court of Canterbury and dean of the Court of Arches, be not appointed the first judge of the Court of Probate, there shall be paid to him during his natural life, as well by way of retiring pension as of salary as dean of the Court of Arches, the net yearly sum of 2000*l.*, to commence from the time appointed for the coming into operation of this act, and to be paid out of the fund and in manner herein provided for the payment of compensations.

110. There shall be a clerk or so many clerks in each district registry, and there shall be paid to such clerk or clerks such salary or respective salaries, as the judge of the court, with the sanction of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, may from time to time think fit to direct; and it shall be lawful for such judge to prescribe from time to time the qualifications which shall be possessed by persons appointed to be clerks in such district registries, and generally to regulate the establishment of such district registries with reference to the duties to be performed therein; and the clerk or clerks in each district registry shall be appointed by the district registrar, with the approval of the judge; and every such clerk may be removed by such judge, or by the district registrar with the approval of the judge.

111. Each district registrar shall, out of the fees taken by him in respect of the business in his respective district registry, pay the salary or salaries of the clerk or clerks in such registry, and the residue of such fees shall be retained by such district registrar to his own use; and every district registrar shall keep an account of all fees so taken by him as aforesaid, and shall within one month after the end of each year render to the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury a faithful account in writing of all such fees received by him during such year: provided, that it shall be lawful for the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, at any time after the commencement of this act, to order that the district registrars under this act, or any of them, shall be paid by salaries instead of fees, and to fix the salaries to be payable to them respectively; and thereupon all fees payable to the district registrars so ordered to be paid by salaries shall be accounted for and paid into the Exchequer at such times and under such regulations as the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall direct, and shall be carried to and form part of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom, and the salaries of such district registrars and of their clerks shall be paid out of such monies as shall be provided by Parliament for that purpose, and no such district registrar shall be deemed to have any claim to compensation on account of any diminution of his emoluments by reason of any such order.

112. It shall be lawful for the Commissioners of the Treasury to grant to every clerical surrogate, or other clerical person, who at the time of the passing of this act shall have been appointed surrogate in either of the provinces of Canterbury or York, such compensation for any loss the said surrogates or persons may sustain by the passing of this act as the said commissioners deem just and proper to be awarded, the said commissioners having regard, in awarding such compensation, to the circumstance of the said clerical surrogates not being able to follow any other professional employment in lieu of the said office of surrogate.

113. That every person to whom any compensation shall be granted under this act shall at all times when called upon be liable to fill any public office or situation in England under the Crown for which his previous services in any office abolished by this act may render him eligible; and that if he shall decline, when called upon so to do, to take upon himself such office or situation, and execute the duties thereof satisfactorily, being in a competent state of health, he shall forfeit his right to any compensation or allowances which may have been granted to him in respect of such previous services.

114. The Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall cause to be prepared in each year ending the 31st December a return of all fees and monies levied in such year under the authority of this act; also a return of the annual salaries of the judge of the said Court of Probate, and of the registrars, deputy registrars, clerks, and all others holding offices either in London or in the country districts, with an account of all the incidental expenses relating to the offices aforesaid, whether such salaries and expenses be defrayed out of fees or out of any other monies; also a return of all superannuations, pensions, annuities, retiring allowances, and compensations made payable under this act in each year, stating the gross amount and the amount in detail of such charges: provided always, that all such returns aforesaid shall be presented to both Houses of Parliament on or before the 31st March in each year, if Parliament is then sitting; and if Parliament is not sitting, then such returns shall be presented within one month of the first meeting of Parliament after the 31st March in each year: provided also, that every district registrar shall keep an account of all fees so taken by him as aforesaid, and shall within one month after the end of each year render to the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury a faithful account in writing of all such fees received by him during such year.

115. The judge of the court, if a privy councillor, shall be a member of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

116. And whereas, with reference to the abolition of the jurisdiction hereby abolished and otherwise, it is expedient to give, confirm, or extend certain powers to or of "the College of Doctors of Law exercent in the Ecclesiastical and Admiralty Courts," incorporated under that style and title by letters-patent, dated the 22nd June, in the eighth year of his late Majesty King George III: be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the said college from time to time hereafter to let, sell, or exchange for other real or personal estate, or both, all or any part of the real and personal estate which shall for the time being belong to the said college, either directly or through the medium of any trustee or trustees, and to lay out the monies to be received on any such sale or exchange or otherwise, belonging to the said college as aforesaid, in the purchase of other real or personal estate, or both, but so that the said college shall not at any one time hold or enjoy real estate of a yearly value exceeding 1000*l.* in the whole, and to pay, apply, and dispose of the income of all the real and personal estate which shall for the time being belong to the said college as aforesaid to or for the benefit of such body or bodies politic or corporate, or person or persons, whether being or including, or not being or including, the said college, and all or any individual members or member thereof for the time being, and generally for such purposes and in such manner as the said college shall think fit; and further, to alien and dispose of all or any part of such real and personal estate, and the proceeds of any sale thereof, either by way of donation, voluntary disposition, or otherwise, unto, between, or amongst any body or bodies politic or corporate, or any person or persons whatsoever, whether being or not being a member or members of the said college: provided always, that no donation or other voluntary disposition of the corpus, or any part of the corpus, of the real and personal estate of the said college, to any person or persons being a member or members thereof at the time of such donation or other voluntary disposition, shall be effectual without the previous consent thereto of a majority of the members of the said college present at any meeting of the college; and the receipt of the treasurer for the time being of the said college shall be an effectual discharge for all gross annual and other sums which shall for the time being belong or be payable to the said college.

117. It shall be lawful for the said college, at any time after a resolution to that effect shall have been come to at a meeting of the college, by a majority of the members present at such meeting, to surrender and yield up to her Majesty, her heirs or successors, at such time as in such resolution shall be determined, the charter of incorporation of the said college, and all franchises and privileges thereby conferred, or which shall for the time being belong to the said college; and upon and by such surrender the said corporation shall be dissolved, and shall cease to exist, for all purposes whatsoever, (except so far as its existence may be requisite for the saving of the rights of her Majesty, her heirs and successors, and of all and every person and persons, body and bodies politic or corporate, whatsoever, other than the said college); and all real and personal estate which at the time of such dissolution of the said college shall belong to the said college for its own use and benefit, either directly or through the medium of any trustee or trustees, shall thenceforth belong, for all the estate and interest therein which at the time of such dissolution belonged to the said college absolutely, to all the persons who, at the time of such dissolution thereof, shall be the president and fellows of the said college, in equal shares, as tenants in common, to and for their own use and benefit respectively, but subject to any charges or incumbrances affecting the same at the time of such dissolution, and all real and personal estate of which the said college at the time of such dissolution thereof shall be seised or possessed, upon any trust or trusts, shall thereupon become vested in the four persons who at the time of such dissolution shall be the president and three senior fellows of the said college, as joint tenants, their heirs, executors, or administrators, according to the nature of the real and personal estates respectively, upon the trust or trusts affecting the same respectively.

118. It shall be lawful for the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, out of such monies as may be provided and appropriated by Parliament for that purpose, to cause to be purchased, erected, hired, or otherwise provided such offices and buildings as may be suitable for the district registries and depository or depositories for wills, and such buildings, if any, as may be necessary for the court and principal registry, in addition to the building by this act vested in the said registrars, or after the determination of their interest in such building.

119. All rules and orders to be made under this act concerning procedure and practice, and the table of fees to be fixed under this act, and all alterations thereof to be from time to time made, shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament within one month after the making thereof, if Parliament be then sitting, or if Parliament be not then sitting, within one month after the commencement of the then next session of Parliament.

3. It shall be lawful for such representatives or representative as hereinbefore mentioned to join and concur or take part in all the proceedings in and about the winding up of the said company, or such of the same proceedings as the judge or master shall deem expedient for the interest of the creditors, and also, subject as hereinafter is mentioned, and so far as the creditors of the said company are concerned, to make or enter into, take part in, consent to, or approve of any compromise, composition, or arbitration, or other arrangement, whether for the discharge and satisfaction of the liability of all and every the shareholders and members, or any or either of them, to the debts and liabilities of such company or otherwise, as such representatives or representative for the time being shall think fit, and the certificate of the judge or master shall be deemed and taken as full and sufficient evidence and proof of every such compromise, composition, arbitration, or other arrangement, and of any discharge or release which may have been thereby effected; and it shall also be lawful for such representatives or representative as hereinbefore mentioned (subject as aforesaid) to take part in, consent to, or approve of any compromise, composition, arbitration, or other arrangement which the official manager may propose to make or enter into with the debtors or creditors of the said company, or otherwise in respect of its estate or affairs; and all the creditors of the said company, whether their debts shall have been then proved or not, shall, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained, be fully and effectually bound by the acts of such representatives or representative as to all such matters as are authorised by this act.

4. No such compromise, composition, arbitration, or other arrangement as in the last section mentioned shall be valid, as against the creditors of the company, unless the same be made with the consent of such representatives, and with leave of the judge or master, who shall give leave to the official manager to be heard thereon; and every such compromise, composition, arbitration, or other arrangement shall be subject to such conditions (if any) as to payment of the costs of any actions, suits, or other proceedings, and as to obtaining the consent of creditors, or any proportion of them, as the said judge or master shall think fit to direct.

5. 6. All orders, directions, reports, and other proceedings of or before the judge or master under this act shall be subject to the appeals given by the two aforesaid Joint-stock Companies Winding-up Acts, 1848 and 1849; and all orders, directions, reports, and other proceedings of or before the Court of Bankruptcy under this act shall be subject to the appeals given by the Bankrupt-law Consolidation Act, 1849.

7. 8. On the hearing of the application of any creditor of any such company for leave to commence or proceed with any such action, (otherwise than as aforesaid), or to issue or proceed with a writ of scire facias or execution as aforesaid, it shall be a sufficient ground for refusing such leave if the person against whom or against whose property or effects such action, scire facias, or execution shall be sought to be commenced, issued, or proceeded with, shall give or shall have given to the official assignee, in case such company shall have been declared bankrupt before an order shall have been made for winding up the company, or to the official manager in case such company shall not have been declared bankrupt before such order shall have been made, security to the satisfaction of the Court of Bankruptcy, or of the master or judge, as the case may be, for payment of such sum or sums of money, and upon such terms, and to be applied in such manner, as the said court or the said master or judge shall require, having regard to the debts and liabilities of such company and to the circumstances of the case, and upon payment of such costs as the said Court of Bankruptcy or the said master or judge may think fit: provided always, that such security to the official manager shall be subject to the consent of the representative (if any) for the time being of the creditors of such company, or if there shall be no such representative at the time of giving such security, then the same shall be subject to the consent of the representative of such creditors when appointed.

9. The provisions contained in the 38th, 40th, and 48th sections of the Joint-stock Companies Winding-up Act, 1848, shall extend to and comprise creditors or persons who have claimed to be creditors of the said company, as well as contributories and alleged contributories; and after the judge or master shall have called on the creditors to appoint a representative or representatives, as hereinbefore mentioned, such creditors and persons who have claimed to be creditors shall be entitled to attend the proceedings, and to submit such proposals and to inspect such books as in the said sections of the said act are mentioned.

10. It shall be lawful for the judge or master of the High Court of Chancery in England, acting in the winding up of any company, to appoint any person in Ireland, and it shall be lawful for the Master of the High Court of Chancery in Ireland, acting as aforesaid, to appoint any person in England, other than or in addition to the commissioners, judges, and other persons named in the 20th section of the Joint-stock Companies Winding-up Act, 1849, to be commissioners for the purposes and with the same powers and authorities as in the said 20th section of the last-mentioned Winding-up Act are named or referred to in that behalf.

11. Nothing in this act contained shall apply to or affect the rights and remedies of any creditor (unless with his own consent) under or in respect of any judgment obtained against any shareholder in Ireland, which judgment has been, prior to the passing of this act, duly registered in manner required by the act passed in the session of Parliament holden in the thirteenth and fourteenth years of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act to amend the Laws relating to Judgments in Ireland," or who shall have actually levied execution, or taken proceedings to obtain an attachment; but no such creditor claiming to retain the benefit of such registered judgment, execution, or attachment, and not to be affected by any compromise under this act, shall be entitled to receive any further dividend, or to have recourse to any other remedy or proceeding other than such right and remedies as he may have in respect of such judgment, execution, or attachment against the lands which are affected by the same, until all the other creditors shall have been paid in full.

12. And whereas the dissolution and winding up of unincorporated companies for working mines within and subject to the jurisdiction of the Stannaries can now, in most cases, be conveniently, cheaply, and expeditiously effected in the court of the vice-warden of the Stannaries: be it enacted, that no petition shall hereafter be filed in the Court of Chancery under the Joint-stock Companies Winding-up Acts, 1848 and 1849, by any adventurer or shareholder in such a company, except upon special application to that court, alleging and shewing, to the satisfaction of the court, that the company cannot be effectually dissolved or wound up in the court of the vice-warden, or unless the vice-warden shall certify to the Court of Chancery that the jurisdiction and powers of his court are, under the circumstances, insufficient effectually to dissolve or wind up the same.

13. In all cases where such a petition shall, upon such application or certificate, be filed in the Court of Chancery, the proof of debts and creditors' claims, the sale of machinery and other effects of the company within the Stannaries, and the distribution of the proceeds of such sales, shall be effected under the general direction of the Court of Chancery, but by and through the immediate agency of the vice-warden or registrar of his court, unless it shall appear to the Court of Chancery to be more conducive to the interests or convenience of adventurers and creditors, or to the saving of time or expense, that such proceedings, or any of them, shall take place in the ordinary course and practice of the Court of Chancery, under the Winding-up Acts above referred to.

14. This act shall be taken and construed as a part of the said Joint-stock Companies Winding-up Acts, 1848 and 1849.

15. The words "shareholder," "member," "contributory," and "alleged contributory" shall be severally taken to include all contributories or alleged contributories within the meaning of the said Joint-stock Companies Winding-up Acts, 1848 and 1849, and also all persons who may apprehend or desire to be discharged from responsibility in respect of the debts, liabilities, or obligations of the company.

16. In citing this act in other acts of Parliament, and in legal instruments and in legal proceedings, it shall be sufficient to use the expression "The Joint-stock Companies Winding-up Amendment Act, 1857."

(cc. 78, 128) "to amend the Laws concerning the Burial of the Dead in England:" and whereas it is expedient to amend the said acts: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. All acts authorised to be done by any burial board, with the approval, sanction, or authority of the vestry or vestries of the parish or parishes for which such board is constituted, may, where a joint burial board is constituted for more than two parishes, be done with the approval, sanction, or authority (as the case may require) of the vestries of the majority of such parishes.

2. Where the vestries of two or more parishes have agreed to provide one burial-ground for the common use of such parishes, such vestries may, at any time before such burial-ground has been provided, determine the union between such parishes under such agreement, and upon such union being so determined all the provisions of the said acts and this act shall be applicable, with regard to such parishes and the respective burial boards thereof, as if such union had not been formed, save that any expenses already properly incurred by the joint burial board for such parishes shall be defrayed as provided by the said acts.

3. Any burial board may, if they see fit, with the approval of one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, provide more than one burial-ground, and may, if they see fit, with such approval, instead of setting apart a portion of any burial-ground, for the purpose of such portion being used as unconsecrated ground, provide separate and distinct grounds to be used respectively as consecrated and unconsecrated burial-grounds: where before the passing of this act any burial board has provided more than one burial-ground, or has (instead of setting apart a portion of any burial-ground for the purpose of being used as unconsecrated ground) provided separate and distinct grounds as consecrated and unconsecrated burial-grounds, such burial board shall be deemed to have acted lawfully and in accordance with the said acts.

4. In case it appear to her Majesty in Council, upon the petition of the local board of health of any district established under the Public Health Act, or upon the petition of any commissioners elected by the ratepayers, and acting under or by virtue of the powers of any local act of Parliament for the improvement of any town, parish, or borough, stating that the district of such local board of health or of such commissioners is co-extensive with a district for which it is proposed to provide a burial-ground, and that no burial board has been appointed for such district, and that an Order in Council has been made for closing all or any of the burial-grounds within the said district, it shall be lawful for her Majesty, with the advice of her Privy Council, in case her Majesty see fit so to do, to order that such local board shall be a burial board for the district of such local board, or that such commissioners shall be a burial board for the district of such commissioners, and thereupon such local board or such commissioners, as the case may be, shall be a burial board for such district accordingly; and the powers and provisions of the acts hereinbefore mentioned, (except the provisions relating to the constitution or appointment and resignation of members of burial boards), and the provisions herein contained, shall extend to the district of such board, and to such board, or to the district of such commissioners, and to such commissioners, and to any burial-ground and places for the reception of the bodies of the dead previously to interment which may be provided by such board or by such commissioners, in like manner as to any parish or parishes and the burial board thereof, and any burial-ground and any such places as aforesaid provided by such last-mentioned board, save that no approval, sanction, or authorisation of any vestry shall be requisite: provided always, that notice of such petition, and of the time when it shall please her Majesty to order the same to be taken into consideration by the Privy Council, shall be published in the London Gazette, and in one of the newspapers usually circulating in the district of such local board or of such commissioners, one month at least before such petition is so considered: provided also, that this enactment shall not apply to any such district as aforesaid exclusively consisting of the whole or part of one corporate borough within the meaning of the Public Health Act, 1848.

5. The vestry, or meeting in the nature of a vestry, of any parish, new parish, township, or other district not separately maintaining its own poor, and which has had no separate burial-ground, may appoint a burial board; and such vestry or meeting, and the burial board appointed by it, shall exercise and have all the powers which they might have exercised and had under the said acts and this act if such parish, new parish, township, or district had had a separate burial-ground before the passing of the said act of the 18 & 19 Vict.: provided always, that all the powers of any other vestry or meeting and burial board, if any, shall then cease and determine, so far as relates to such parish, new parish, township, or district as aforesaid; and until a burial-ground shall be so provided as aforesaid and consecrated for any new parish or district created or to be created pursuant to the provisions of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 37, the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 94, and the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 104, or any or either of them, and to which the said acts, or any or either of them, may apply, the incumbent of such new parish or district (if any burial-ground has been or shall be provided under the herein-recited acts for the burial of the dead, or any or either of them, for any parish or parishes, out of rates to which such new parish or district, or any part thereof, shall have contributed or contribute or be liable) shall, with respect to the burial in such last-mentioned burial-ground of the remains of the parishioners or inhabitants of such new parish or district, or of such part thereof as shall have contributed or contribute as aforesaid, as the case may be, perform the same duties, and have the same rights, privileges, and authorities, and be entitled to the same fees, and also the clerk and sexton of such new parish or district shall, when necessary, respectively perform the same duties, and be entitled to the same fees, in respect of such burials, as if the said burial-ground were exclusively the burial-ground of such new parish or district, subject nevertheless to all provisions to which the incumbents, clerks, and sextons of original parishes are respectively subject in and by the said Burial Acts, or any or either of them: provided also, that nothing herein contained shall affect the rights or privileges of any existing incumbent, clerk, or sexton, without the consent of such incumbent, clerk, or sexton respectively.

6. Where the guardians of any parish or union are or shall hereafter become possessed of any land suitable to the purposes of a burial-ground, and the Poor-law Board shall consent to the same being appropriated to the reception of the dead bodies of any poor persons whom such guardians shall be authorised or required by law to bury, it shall be lawful for the ordinary of the diocese wherein such land shall be situated, if he see fit, to consecrate the whole or a part of such land for burial purposes, and after consecration the guardians may lawfully direct any such dead body as aforesaid to be buried therein; and the land so consecrated shall not thenceforth be used for any other purposes than for burials according to the rites of the United Church of England and Ireland, and shall be kept in decent order; and the fences thereof, and any building or other erection therein or adjoining thereto used for the performance of the burial service, shall be maintained in good repair by the guardians, out of the common fund of such parish or union: provided nevertheless, that the guardians shall not be authorised to direct the body of any poor person to be buried in such grounds who, or whose husband, wife, or next of kin, shall, by letter addressed to the master of the workhouse or otherwise, have expressly desired burial to take place elsewhere.

7. Where a burial-ground has been provided for any parish under any of the acts commonly referred to or known as the Church Building Acts, and the same has been consecrated, and any money expended in providing such burial-ground has been borrowed on the security of the church rates, it shall be lawful for the incumbent of the parish, with the consent of the ordinary and the burial board of such parish, or of any borough or district in which such parish is wholly or in part comprised, by instrument in writing under the hands and seals of such incumbent and ordinary, and under the seal of the said burial board, to declare, that in consideration of the payment of the debt by the said burial board, or of such sum as shall be mutually agreed upon, with the consent of the persons, signified in writing under their hands, to whom two-thirds of such debt is due, the said burial-ground shall be vested in and be under the care and management of such burial board, and thereupon the same shall be vested in and be under the care and management of such board, and shall be subject to the provisions of the hereinbefore-recited acts and this act applicable to a consecrated burial-ground or the consecrated part of any burial-ground provided by any burial board; and any money borrowed as aforesaid, and remaining owing, and the interest due and to become due thereon, and all costs and expenses occasioned by the non-payment thereof, or incurred in providing such burial-ground, and then remaining unpaid, shall be charged on and paid out of such rates or fund as under the said last-mentioned acts and this act would be chargeable with the expense of providing a burial-ground by such board, and such declaration as aforesaid shall be registered in the registry of the diocese; and such board may, with the approval of the vestry, enlarge such burial-ground, by the addition of ground to be used for burials otherwise than according to the rites of the Church of England, and to be used subject to the provisions of the acts herein recited and of this act in respect to the unconsecrated portions of burial-grounds.

8. It shall and may be lawful for the vestry of any parish in which any burial-ground closed by Order in Council may be situate, and which does not belong to such parish, by resolution of the vestry at a meeting called for that purpose, to purchase such burial-ground, and from the time of such purchase such burial-ground shall belong to such parish, and be subject to all the conditions affecting the burial-grounds of the parish in which the same is situate.

9. And whereas, by the said act of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 128, it is enacted, that where a parish or place has been united with any other parish or place, parishes or places, for all or any ecclesiastical purposes, or where two or more parishes or places have heretofore had a church or a burial-ground for their joint use, or where the inhabitants of several parishes or places have been accustomed to meet in one vestry for purposes common to such several parishes or places, it shall be lawful for the vestry, or any meeting in the nature of a vestry, of such several parishes or places, in any of the cases aforesaid, and whether any one or more of such parishes or places do or do not separately maintain its own poor, to appoint a burial board, and from time to time to supply vacancies therein, and to exercise the same powers of authorisation, approval, and sanction in relation to such burial board, and such other powers, as under the acts therein recited and that act are vested in the vestry of a parish or place separately maintaining its own poor: where any of the several parishes or places under the circumstances provided for in the said enactment separately maintains its own poor, or has a separate burial-ground, it shall not be lawful for the vestry, or meeting in the nature of a vestry, of such several parishes or places to appoint a burial board under the said enactment without the approval of one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State; and in case it appear to the Secretary of State that any such parish or place has a sufficient burial-ground, or that otherwise it would not be expedient that the powers given by the said enactment should be exercised in relation to such parish or place, the Secretary of State may direct that such parish or place shall be excepted from the operation of the said enactment, and thereupon the same shall be excepted accordingly; and the inhabitants of the remaining parish or parishes, place or places, may assemble in vestry, or in a meeting in the nature of a vestry, from time to time, and in such vestry or meeting may proceed in like manner under the said acts and this act in all respects as if the inhabitants of such last-mentioned parish or parishes, place or places, exclusively had a vestry for their common purposes, and were wholly unconnected with the parish or place so excepted.

10. It shall be lawful for her Majesty, by order made by and with the advice of her Privy Council, on the representation of one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, from time to time to establish such regulations as to her Majesty may seem proper for the protection of the public health, and for the maintenance of public decency, in respect of all burials in common graves in any cemeteries named in Schedule (B.) to the act 15 & 16 Vict. c. 85, and in respect of the like burials in any cemetery established under the authority of any local act of Parliament; and every such Order in Council shall be published in the London Gazette; and all persons having the care of such cemeteries and burial-grounds and places shall conform to and obey such regulations; and any such person who shall violate or wilfully neglect to observe any of such regulations shall, on summary conviction thereof before two justices of the peace, forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding 10*l.*; provided always, that no such representation shall be made in relation to any cemetery or burial-ground until ten days' previous notice in writing of the intention to make such representation shall have been given to the person or one of the persons having the control or care of such cemetery or burial-ground.

11. It shall not be necessary to erect or maintain any wall or fence between the consecrated and the unconsecrated portions of any burial-ground provided under the hereinbefore recited acts and this act, or any of them: provided always, that in the case of any burial-ground where there shall be no such wall or fence, it shall be the duty of the burial board having the care of such burial-ground to place, and from time to time to repair and renew, such boundary marks of stone or iron as may be sufficient to shew the boundaries of such consecrated and unconsecrated portions respectively.

12. If, upon the application in writing by any burial board to the bishop of the diocese for the consecration of a burial-ground, declared in such writing to be in a fit and proper condition for the purpose of interment according to the rites of the United Church of England and Ireland, which application the board is required to make as soon as such ground is in such fit and proper condition, the said bishop shall refuse to consecrate the same, it shall be lawful for such burial board to appeal from such refusal to the archbishop of the province, who shall decide the matter in dispute; and if the said archbishop shall decide that the said burial-ground is not in a fit and proper condition as aforesaid, then the board shall be bound to put the said ground in a fit and proper condition; and if the said archbishop shall decide that the said burial-ground is in a fit and proper condition as aforesaid, and ought to be consecrated, such decision shall be communicated in writing by the archbishop to the bishop aforesaid; and if after such communication the said bishop shall not within one calendar month consecrate the said burial-ground, the said archbishop shall, under his hand and seal, license the same for the interment of bodies according to the rites of the United Church of England and Ireland, and the license of the said archbishop so granted as aforesaid shall, until such burial-ground be consecrated, operate to make lawful the use of the same as if it had been consecrated.

13. In any burial-ground provided under the powers of the acts hereinbefore recited or this act, respecting which one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State shall have certified that the necessary provisions have been complied with, it shall be lawful for the incumbent or incumbents of such parish or parishes for which such burial-ground is provided, or his or their curate or curates, or such duly qualified person as any such incumbent may authorise, if such incumbent, curate, or such duly qualified person respectively think fit, to bury in such burial-ground prior to the decision of the bishop or archbishop upon the application for the consecration thereof.

14. Whereas, by sect. 32 of the 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, it is enacted, that no toll shall be demanded or taken by virtue of that or any other act or acts of Parliament on any turnpike-road of or from any inhabitant of any parish, township, or place going to or returning from attending the funeral of any person who shall die and be buried in the parish, township, or place in which any turnpike-road shall lie, from and after the 1st July, 1858, or from and after the termination of any now existing lease of tolls expiring before that date: the said enactment shall extend to exempt from toll every person going to or returning from attending the funeral of any person who shall be buried in any burial-ground provided for the parish, township, or place in which he died, under the acts hereinbefore recited, and this act, or any of them, or under any other act of Parliament, although such burial-ground be not within the limits of the parish, township, or place for which it may have been provided, or in which the turnpike-road shall lie.

15. That every person who shall wilfully destroy or injure, or cause to be destroyed or injured, any register-book of burials kept according to the provisions of this act, or any part or certified copy of any part of such register, or shall falsely make or counterfeit, or cause to be falsely made or counterfeited, any part of any such register or certified copy thereof, or shall wilfully insert or cause to be inserted in any register-book or certified copy thereof any false entry of any burial, or shall wilfully give any false certificate, or shall certify any writing to be a copy or extract of any such register-book, knowing the same to be false in any part thereof, or shall forge or counterfeit the seal of any burial board, shall be guilty of felony.

16. Whereas, by the act of the 52 Geo. 3, c. 146, s. 4, it is provided, that whenever the ceremony of burial shall be performed in any other place than the parish church or churchyard of any parish, (or the chapel or chapelyard of any chapelry providing its own distinct registers), and such ceremony shall be performed by any minister not being the rector, vicar, minister, or curate of such parish or chapelry, the minister who shall perform such ceremony of burial shall on the same or on the next day transmit to the rector, vicar, or other minister of such parish or chapelry, or his curate, a certificate of such burial, and the rector, vicar, minister, or curate of such parish or chapelry shall thereupon enter such burial according to such certificate in the book kept pursuant to that act for such purpose; and whereas distinct registers are by law required to be kept in the burial-grounds provided under the burial acts: the recited enactment of the said act of Geo. 3 shall not apply in any case where the ceremonial of burial is performed in a burial-ground provided or to be provided under the acts of her Majesty hereinbefore recited, and this act, or any of them.

17. No fees shall be charged or received by any burial board in respect of any service done or right granted in the unconsecrated portion of any burial-ground provided by such board, but such as are identical in amount with the fees charged and received in respect of the same service or right in the consecrated portion of such ground, less any such portion of such corresponding fees or payments which may be received for or on account of any incumbent, churchwarden, clerk, or sexton, or of any trustee for or on behalf of any incumbent, churchwarden, clerk, or sexton.

18. So much of sect. 20 of the firstly hereinbefore-recited act as requires "that there shall be paid in every year, in addition to the interest of the money borrowed and unpaid, not less than one twentieth of the principal sum borrowed, until the whole is discharged," shall be repealed, and the provisions of the other acts hereinbefore recited to which the said section has been extended shall be construed accordingly.

19. The clauses of the Commissioners Clauses Act, 1847, with respect to mortgages to be executed by the commissioners, shall be incorporated with this act, and shall apply to mortgages and other securities to be executed by burial boards; and for the purposes of this act the expression "the commissioners," where used in the said clauses, shall mean the burial board acting in the execution of the said clauses and the acts hereinbefore recited or this act.

20. Provided always, that for the purpose of providing a sinking fund for paying off the principal money borrowed on mortgages granted under any of the said acts or this act, the burial board shall once in every year set aside, out of the monies charged by such mortgages, such sum as they think proper, being a sum equal to or exceeding one-fiftieth part of the principal money so borrowed.

21. Any burial board or council of a borough may, for the purpose of raising money, instead of making mortgages under any of the said acts, grant terminable annuities for a life or lives, or for any number of years not exceeding thirty years, to be paid out of the like monies as provided with regard to the monies secured by such mortgages.

22. Any money required by the council of any borough for the purpose of defraying the expense of executing the acts hereinbefore recited, or any of them, or this act, or for paying any monies borrowed under such act, or any interest thereon, may be raised by such council, if they think fit, by means of a separate rate, to be called a burial rate, to be charged upon all property within such borough liable to be charged to the borough rate; and the council of such borough shall have all such powers for making and levying such rate, and all provisions shall be applicable in respect thereof, as in the case of a borough rate made under the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76.

23. It shall be lawful for her Majesty, upon the representation of one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, from time to time to order such acts to be done, by or under the directions of the churchwardens or such other persons as may have the care of any vaults or places of burial, for preventing them from becoming or continuing dangerous or injurious to the public health; and every such Order in Council shall be published in the London Gazette, and such churchwardens or other persons shall do or cause to be done all acts ordered as aforesaid, and the expenses incurred in and about the doing thereof shall be paid out of the poor rates of the parish: provided always, that no such representation shall be made until ten days' previous notice of the intention to make such representation shall have been given to the churchwardens or other persons, or one of the churchwardens or other persons, having the care of the vaults or places of burial to which the representation relates.

24. In all cases in which unconsecrated land or buildings is or are vested in a trustee or trustees, either under any local act or otherwise, for the purposes of a cemetery or burial-ground, and burials in such cemetery or burial-ground shall, by Order in Council under the hereinbefore-recited acts, or any of them, have been ordered to be wholly or partially discontinued, it shall be lawful for the trustee or trustees for the time being of such cemetery or burial-ground, from time to time, with the sanction of one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, to let, demise, or lease any part or parts, in which no interment shall have taken place, of such land or buildings, and to renew or accept surrenders of any leases or tenancies thereof, and to sell and absolutely dispose thereof for money in gross, or for any perpetual or other rent or rents to be made payable thereout, and by public auction or private contract, and to sell all or any such perpetual or other rent or rents for money in gross, and in manner aforesaid, and for any of the purposes aforesaid to make and execute any contracts, conveyances, leases, or other assurances, and to take any measures and make any arrangements which may be deemed expedient; and upon any such lease or sale as aforesaid a grant or conveyance by such trustee or trustees alone shall be a sufficient assurance of the property thereby purported to be leased or sold, and the receipts of such trustee or trustees shall be effectual discharges for the monies therein expressed to have been received, and shall absolve any lessee or purchaser from having to see to, or being answerable for, the application of such monies; and the net monies to be received by such trustee or trustees, under any of the preceding powers, shall be applied by them in discharge of any incumbrances affecting such cemetery or burial-ground, and any debts which such trustee or trustees may have properly incurred in their fiduciary capacity; and any residue of such monies shall, where such land or buildings shall have been held in trust for any parish, be applied in such manner, for the benefit of such parish, as the vestry of such parish shall direct; but where such land or buildings shall have been held in trust for the benefit of private persons, such residue shall be divided by such trustee or trustees rateably among the cestuis que trust; and it shall be lawful for such trustee or trustees so to apply any reserved fund in his or their hands.

25. Except in the cases where a body is removed from one consecrated place of burial to another by faculty granted by the ordinary for that purpose, it shall not be lawful to remove any body, or the remains of any body, which may have been interred in any place of burial, without license under the hand of one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, and with such precautions as such Secretary of State may prescribe as the condition of such license; and any person who shall remove any such body or remains contrary to this enactment, or who shall neglect to observe the precautions prescribed as the condition of the license for removal, shall, on summary conviction before any two justices of the peace, forfeit and pay for every such offence a sum not exceeding 10*l*.

26. Where any cemetery in which burials have, by Order in Council under the hereinbefore-recited acts, or any of them, been ordered to be discontinued, is adjoining or near to any land appropriated or about to be appropriated by any burial board for the purposes of a burial-ground, and appears to such board eligible for the purpose of appropriating or erecting buildings for or making approaches to such burial-ground, it shall be lawful for such board, with the approval of the vestry or respective vestries, to purchase such cemetery; and where in the like case any cemetery has been so purchased before the passing of this act, the purchase thereof shall be deemed to have been lawful: provided always, that, notwithstanding such purchase, such Order in Council shall remain in full force and effect in relation to such cemetery.

27. No resolution or proceeding of any vestry, or meeting in the nature of a vestry, for the purposes of the said recited acts and this act, or any of them, shall be void or voidable by reason of any defect or irregularity of or in notice of such vestry or meeting, or any other error in form in the calling of such vestry or meeting, or in the proceedings thereat, unless notice in writing of such defect or irregularity or error shall have been given at such vestry or meeting, or within seven days after the day of the holding thereof, to the churchwardens or other persons to whom it belongs to call meetings of such vestry, or such meeting in the nature of a vestry, who shall thereupon call another meeting for the purpose of considering the previous resolution or proceeding, or the matter thereof; and no such resolution and proceeding made or taken at any such vestry, or meeting in the nature of a vestry, before the passing of this act, which shall not have been objected to by notice in writing to such churchwardens or persons as aforesaid, shall be deemed invalid by reason of any such defect, irregularity, or error.

28. In the construction of this act the expression "burial board" shall mean a burial board constituted under the hereinbefore-recited acts, or any of them, or under this act.

29. That the expression "borough," whenever used in the said act of the 17 & 18 Vict. [c. 87], shall be construed to include any city, borough, port, cinque port, or town corporate named in the schedules annexed to an act passed in the 6 Will. 4, intituled "An Act to provide for the Regulation of Municipal Corporations in England and Wales," and to any city, borough, port, cinque port, or town corporate incorporated by charter granted or to be granted in pursuance of that or any subsequent act; and the words "town council of any borough," or "council of any borough," wherever used in the said act of the 17 & 18 Vict. [c. 87], shall (as well with respect to all past as to future proceedings under the same act, and for the purpose of confirming and making valid all such past proceedings) be construed to mean town council or council of any city, borough, port, cinque port, or town corporate.

30. The hereinbefore-recited acts and this act shall be construed together as one act.

Whereas it is expedient to amend the law relating to divorce, and to constitute a court with exclusive jurisdiction in matters matrimonial in England, and with authority in certain cases to decree the dissolution of a marriage: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. This act shall come into operation on such day, not sooner than the 1st January, 1858, as her Majesty shall by Order in Council appoint, provided that such Order be made one month at least previously to the day so to be appointed.

2. As soon as this act shall come into operation, all jurisdiction now exerciseable by any ecclesiastical court in England in respect of divorces à mensâ et thoro, suits of nullity of marriage, suits of jactitation of marriage, suits for restitution of conjugal rights, and in all causes, suits, and matters matrimonial, shall cease to be so exerciseable, except so far as relates to the granting of marriage licenses, which may be granted as if this act had not been passed.

3. Any decree or order of any ecclesiastical court of competent jurisdiction which shall have been made before this act comes into operation, in any cause or matter matrimonial, may be enforced or otherwise dealt with by the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes hereinafter mentioned, in the same way as if it had been originally made by the said court under this act.

4. All suits and proceedings in causes and matters matrimonial which at the time when this act comes into operation shall be pending in any ecclesiastical court in England shall be transferred to, dealt with, and decided by the said Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, as if the same had been originally instituted in the said court.

5. Provided, that if at the time when this act comes into operation any cause or matter which would be transferred to the said Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes under the enactment hereinbefore contained shall have been heard before any judge having jurisdiction in relation to such cause or matter, and be then standing for judgment, such judge may, at any time within six weeks after the time when this act comes into operation, give in to one of the registrars attending the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes a written judgment thereon, signed by him; and a decree or order, as the case may require, shall be drawn up in pursuance of such judgment, and every such decree or order shall have the same force and effect as if it had been drawn up in pursuance of a judgment of the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes on the day on which the same was delivered to the registrar, and shall be subject to appeal under this act.

6. As soon as this act shall come into operation, all jurisdiction now vested in or exerciseable by any ecclesiastical court or person in England in respect of divorces à mensâ et thoro, suits of nullity of marriage, suits for restitution of conjugal rights, or jactitation of marriage, and in all causes, suits, and matters matrimonial, except in respect of marriage licenses, shall belong to and be vested in her Majesty, and such jurisdiction, together with the jurisdiction conferred by this act, shall be exercised in the name of her Majesty in a court of record to be called "the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes."

7. No decree shall hereafter be made for a divorce à mensâ et thoro, but in all cases in which a decree for a divorce à mensâ et thoro might now be pronounced, the court may pronounce a decree for a judicial separation, which shall have the same force and the same consequences as a divorce à mensâ et thoro now has.

8. The Lord Chancellor, the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench, the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, the Lord Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer, the senior puisne judge for the time being in each of the three last-mentioned courts, and the judge of her Majesty's Court of Probate constituted by any act of the present session, shall be the judges of the said court.

9. The judge of the Court of Probate shall be called the Judge Ordinary of the said court, and shall have full authority, either alone or with one or more of the other judges of the said court, to hear and determine all matters arising therein, except petitions for the dissolving of or annulling marriage, and applications for new trials of questions or issues before a jury, bills of exception, special verdicts, and special cases, and, except as aforesaid, may exercise all the powers and authority of the said court.

10. All petitions, either for the dissolution or for a sentence of nullity of marriage, and applications for new trials of questions or issues before a jury, shall be heard and determined by three or more judges of the said court, of whom the judge of the Court of Probate shall be one.

11. During the temporary absence of the Judge Ordinary, the Lord Chancellor may by writing under his hand authorise the Master of the Rolls, the Judge of the Admiralty Court, or either of the Lords Justices, or any Vice-Chancellor, or any judge of the superior courts of law at Westminster, to act as Judge Ordinary of the said Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, and the Master of the Rolls, the Judge of the Admiralty Court, Lord Justice, Vice-Chancellor, or judge of the superior courts shall, when so acting, have and exercise all the jurisdiction, power, and authority which might have been exercised by the Judge Ordinary.

12. The Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes shall hold its sittings at such place or places in London or Middlesex or elsewhere as her Majesty in Council shall from time to time appoint.

13. The Lord Chancellor shall direct a seal to be made for the said court, and may direct the same to be broken, altered, and renewed, at his discretion; and all decrees and orders, or copies of decrees or orders, of the said court, sealed with the said seal, shall be received in evidence.

14. The registrars and other officers of the principal registry of the Court of Probate shall attend the sittings of the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, and assist in the proceedings thereof, as shall be directed by the rules and orders under this act.

15. All persons admitted to practise as advocates or proctors respectively in any ecclesiastical court in England, and all barristers, attornies, and solicitors entitled to practise in the superior courts at Westminster, shall be entitled to practise in the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes; and such advocates and barristers shall have the same relative rank and precedence which they now have in the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, unless and until her Majesty shall otherwise order.

16. A sentence of judicial separation (which shall have the effect of a divorce à mensâ et thoro under the existing law, and such other legal effect as herein mentioned) may be obtained, either by the husband or the wife, on the ground of adultery, or cruelty, or desertion without cause for two years and upwards.

17. Application for restitution of conjugal rights, or for judicial separation, on any one of the grounds aforesaid, may be made by either husband or wife, by petition to the court, or to any judge of assize at the assizes held for the county in which the husband and wife reside or last resided together, and which judge of assize is hereby authorised and required to hear and determine such petition, according to the rules and regulations which shall be made under the authority of this act; and the court or judge to which such petition is addressed, on being satisfied of the truth of the allegations therein contained, and that there is no legal ground why the same should not be granted, may decree such restitution of conjugal rights or judicial separation accordingly, and, where the application is by the wife, may make any order for alimony which shall be deemed just: provided always, that any judge of assize to whom such petition shall be presented may refer the same to any of her Majesty's counsel or serjeant-at-law named in the commission of assise or nisi prius, and such counsel or serjeant shall, for the purpose of deciding upon the matters of such petition, have all the powers that any such judge would have had by virtue of this act or otherwise.

18. For the purpose of hearing and deciding all applications under the authority of this act, the judge of assize, or person nominated by him as aforesaid, shall be entitled to avail himself of the services of all officers, and use and exercise all powers and authorities, which the court of assize may employ, use, and exercise for the determination of causes and other matters now usually heard and decided by them respectively, and the said judge of assise or other person shall also for the purpose have and be entitled to exercise all the powers and authorities hereby given to the court for the hearing and deciding applications made to it, and also the powers hereby given to the court to make provision touching the custody, maintenance, and education of children; and every order made by any judge of assize or other person under the authority of this act may, on the application of the person obtaining the same, be entered as an order of the court, and when so entered shall have the same force and effect, and be enforced in the same manner, as if such order had been originally made by the court.

19. The court shall from time to time fix and regulate the fees which shall be payable upon all proceedings under any application to a judge of assize under this act; and such fees shall be received in money, for their own benefit, by the persons to whom or for whose use the same shall be directed to be paid.

20. Any order so entered as aforesaid may be reviewed, and either altered or reversed on appeal to the judge ordinary of the court, but such appeal shall not stay the intermediate execution of the order, unless the judge ordinary shall so direct, who shall have power, if such appeal be dismissed or abandoned, to order the appellant to pay to the other party the full costs incurred by reason of such appeal.

21. A wife deserted by her husband may at any time after such desertion, if resident within the metropolitan district, apply to a police magistrate, or if resident in the country to justices in petty sessions, or in either case to the court, for an order to protect any money or property she may acquire by her own lawful industry, and property which she may become possessed of, after such desertion, against her husband or his creditors, or any person claiming under him; and such magistrate or justices or court, if satisfied of the fact of such desertion, and that the same was without reasonable cause, and that the wife is maintaining herself by her own industry or property, may make and give to the wife an order protecting her earnings and property acquired since the commencement of such desertion, from her husband and all creditors and persons claiming under him, and such earnings and property shall belong to the wife as if she were a feme sole: provided always, that every such order, if made by a police magistrate or justices at petty sessions, shall, within ten days after the making thereof, be entered with the registrar of the county court within whose jurisdiction the wife is resident; and that it shall be lawful for the husband, and any creditor or other person claiming under him, to apply to the court, or to the magistrate or justices by whom such order was made, for the discharge thereof: provided also, that if the husband, or any creditor of or person claiming under the husband, shall seize or continue to hold any property of the wife after notice of any such order, he shall be liable, at the suit of the wife, (which she is hereby empowered to bring), to restore the specific property, and also for a sum equal to double the value of the property so seized or held after such notice as aforesaid: if any such order of protection be made, the wife shall, during the continuance thereof, be and be deemed to have been, during such desertion of her, in the like position in all respects, with regard to property and contracts and suing and being sued, as she would be under this act if she obtained a decree of judicial separation.

22. In all suits and proceedings, other than proceedings to dissolve any marriage, the said court shall proceed and act and give relief on principles and rules which in the opinion of the said court shall be as nearly as may be conformable to the principles and rules on which the ecclesiastical courts have heretofore acted and given relief, but subject to the provisions herein contained, and to the rules and orders under this act.

23. Any husband or wife, upon the application of whose wife or husband, as the case may be, a decree of judicial separation has been pronounced, may, at any time thereafter, present a petition to the court praying for a reversal of such decree on the ground that it was obtained in his or her absence, and that there was reasonable ground for the alleged desertion, where desertion was the ground of such decree; and the court may, on being satisfied of the truth of the allegations of such petition, reverse the decree accordingly, but the reversal thereof shall not prejudice or affect the rights or remedies which any other person would have had in case such reversal had not been decreed, in respect of any debts, contracts, or acts of the wife incurred, entered into, or done between the times of the sentence of separation and of the reversal thereof.

24. In all cases in which the court shall make any decree or order for alimony it may direct the same to be paid either to the wife herself or to any trustee on her behalf, to be approved by the court, and may impose any terms or restrictions which to the court may seem expedient, and may from time to time appoint a new trustee, if for any reason it shall appear to the court expedient so to do.

25. In every case of a judicial separation the wife shall, from the date of the sentence, and whilst the separation shall continue, be considered as a feme sole with respect to property of every description which she may acquire, or which may come to or devolve upon her; and such property may be disposed of by her in all respects as a feme sole, and on her decease the same shall, in case she shall die intestate, go as the same would have gone if her husband had been then dead: provided, that if any such wife should again cohabit with her husband, all such property as she may be entitled to when such cohabitation shall take place shall be held to her separate use, subject, however, to any agreement in writing made between herself and her husband whilst separate.

26. In every case of a judicial separation the wife shall, whilst so separated, be considered as a feme sole for the purposes of contract, and wrongs and injuries, and suing and being sued in any civil proceeding; and her husband shall not be liable in respect of any engagement or contract she may have entered into, or for any wrongful act or omission by her, or for any costs she may incur as plaintiff or defendant: provided, that where, upon any such judicial separation alimony has been decreed or ordered to be paid to the wife, and the same shall not be duly paid by the husband, he shall be liable for necessaries supplied for her use: provided also, that nothing shall prevent the wife from joining, at any time during such separation, in the exercise of any joint power given to herself and her husband.

27. It shall be lawful for any husband to present a petition to the said court praying that his marriage may be dissolved, on the ground that his wife has, since the celebration thereof, been guilty of adultery; and it shall be lawful for any wife to present a petition to the said court praying that her marriage may be dissolved, on the ground that since the celebration thereof her husband has been guilty of incestuous adultery, or of bigamy with adultery, or of rape, or of sodomy or bestiality, or of adultery coupled with such cruelty as, without adultery, would have entitled her to a divorce à mensâ et thoro, or of adultery coupled with desertion, without reasonable excuse, for two years or upwards; and every such petition shall state, as distinctly as the nature of the case permits, the facts on which the claim to have such marriage dissolved is founded: provided that, for the purposes of this act, incestuous adultery shall be taken to mean adultery committed by a husband with a woman with whom, if his wife were dead, he could not lawfully contract marriage, by reason of her being within the prohibited degrees of consanguinity or affinity; and bigamy shall be taken to mean marriage of any person, being married, to any other person during the life of the former husband or wife, whether the second marriage shall have taken place within the dominions of her Majesty or elsewhere.

28. Upon any such petition presented by a husband the petitioner shall make the alleged adulterer a co-respondent to the said petition, unless on special grounds, to be allowed by the court, he shall be excused from so doing; and on every petition presented by a wife for dissolution of marriage the court, if it see fit, may direct that the person with whom the husband is alleged to have committed adultery be made a respondent; and the parties or either of them may insist on having the contested matters of fact tried by a jury, as hereinafter mentioned.

29. Upon any such petition for the dissolution of a marriage it shall be the duty of the court to satisfy itself, so far as it reasonably can, not only as to the facts alleged, but also whether or no the petitioner has been in any manner accessory to or conniving at the adultery, or has condoned the same, and shall also inquire into any counter charge which may be made against the petitioner.

30. In case the court, on the evidence in relation to any such petition, shall not be satisfied that the alleged adultery has been committed, or shall find that the petitioner has during the marriage been accessory to or conniving at the adultery of the other party to the marriage, or has condoned the adultery complained of, or that the petition is presented or prosecuted in collusion with either of the respondents, then and in any of the said cases the court shall dismiss the said petition.

31. In case the court shall be satisfied on the evidence that the case of the petitioner has been proved, and shall not find that the petitioner has been in any manner accessory to or conniving at the adultery of the other party to the marriage, or has condoned the adultery complained of, or that the petition is presented or prosecuted in collusion with either of the respondents, then the court shall pronounce a decree declaring such marriage to be dissolved: provided always, that the court shall not be bound to pronounce such decree if it shall find that the petitioner has during the marriage been guilty of adultery, or if the petitioner shall, in the opinion of the court, have been guilty of unreasonable delay in presenting or prosecuting such petition, or of cruelty towards the other party to the marriage, or of having deserted or wilfully separated himself or herself from the other party before the adultery complained of, and without reasonable excuse, or of such wilful neglect or misconduct as has conduced to the adultery.

32. The court may, if it shall think fit, on any such decree, order that the husband shall, to the satisfaction of the court, secure to the wife such gross sum of money, or such annual sum of money, for any term not exceeding her own life, as, having regard to her fortune, if any, to the ability of the husband, and to the conduct of the parties, it shall deem reasonable; and for that purpose may refer it to any one of the conveyancing counsel of the Court of Chancery to settle and approve of a proper deed or instrument to be executed by all necessary parties; and the said court may in such case, if it shall see fit, suspend the pronouncing of its decree until such deed shall have been duly executed; and upon any petition for dissolution of marriage the court shall have the same power to make interim orders for payment of money, by way of alimony or otherwise, to the wife, as it would have in a suit instituted for judicial separation.

33. Any husband may, either in a petition for dissolution of marriage or for judicial separation, or in a petition limited to such object only, claim damages from any person on the ground of his having committed adultery with the wife of such petitioner, and such petition shall be served on the alleged adulterer and the wife, unless the court shall dispense with such service, or direct some other service to be substituted; and the claim made by every such petition shall be heard and tried on the same principles, in the same manner, and subject to the same or the like rules and regulations as actions for criminal conversation are now tried and decided in courts of common law; and all the enactments herein contained with reference to the hearing and decision of petitions to the court shall, so far as may be necessary, be deemed applicable to the hearing and decision of petitions presented under this enactment; and the damages to be recovered on any such petition shall in all cases be ascertained by the verdict of a jury, although the respondents, or either of them, may not appear; and after the verdict has been given the court shall have power to direct in what manner such damages shall be paid or applied, and to direct that the whole or any part thereof shall be settled for the benefit of the children (if any) of the marriage, or as a provision for the maintenance of the wife.

34. Whenever in any petition presented by a husband the alleged adulterer shall have been made a co-respondent, and the adultery shall have been established, it shall be lawful for the court to order the adulterer to pay the whole or any part of the costs of the proceedings.

35. In any suit or other proceeding for obtaining a judicial separation or a decree of nullity of marriage, and on any petition for dissolving a marriage, the court may from time to time, before making its final decree, make such interim orders, and may make such provision in the final decree, as it may deem just and proper, with respect to the custody, maintenance, and education of the children the marriage of whose parents is the subject of such suit or other proceeding, and may, if it shall think fit, direct proper proceedings to be taken for placing such children under the protection of the Court of Chancery.

36. In questions of fact arising in proceedings under this act it shall be lawful for, but, except as hereinbefore provided, not obligatory upon, the court to direct the truth thereof to be determined before itself, or before any one or more of the judges of the said court, by the verdict of a special or common jury.

37. The court, or any judge thereof, may make all such rules and orders upon the sheriff or any other person for procuring the attendance of a special or common jury for the trial of such question as may now be made by any of the superior courts of common law at Westminster, and may also make any other orders which to such court or judge may seem requisite; and every such jury shall consist of persons possessing the like qualifications, and shall be struck, summoned, balloted for, and called in like manner, as if such jury were a jury for the trial of any cause in any of the said superior courts; and every juryman so summoned shall be entitled to the same rights, and subject to the same duties and liabilities, as if he had been duly summoned for the trial of any such cause in any of the said superior courts; and every party to any such proceeding shall be entitled to the same rights as to challenge and otherwise as if he were a party to any such cause.

38. When any such question shall be so ordered to be tried such question shall be reduced into writing in such form as the court shall direct, and at the trial the jury shall be sworn to try the said question, and a true verdict to give thereon according to the evidence; and upon every such trial the court or judge shall have the same powers, jurisdiction, and authority as any judge of any of the said superior courts sitting at nisi prius.

39. Upon the trial of any such question or of any issue under this act a bill of exceptions may be tendered, and a general or special verdict or verdicts, subject to a special case, may be returned, in like manner as in any cause tried in any of the said superior courts; and every such bill of exceptions, special verdict, and special case respectively shall be stated, settled, and sealed in like manner as in any cause tried in any of the said superior courts, and where the trial shall not have been had in the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes shall be returned into such court without any writ of error or other writ; and the matter of law in every such bill of exceptions, special verdict, and special case shall be heard and determined by the full courts, subject to such right of appeal as is hereinafter given in other cases.

40. It shall be lawful for the court to direct one or more issue or issues to be tried in any court of common law, and either before a judge of assize in any county or at the sittings for the trial of causes in London or Middlesex, and either by a special or common jury, in like manner as is now done by the Court of Chancery.

41. Every person seeking a decree of nullity of marriage, or a decree of judicial separation, or a dissolution of marriage, or decree in a suit of jactitation of marriage, shall, together with the petition or other application for the same, file an affidavit verifying the same so far as he or she is able to do so, and stating that there is not any collusion or connivance between the deponent and the other party to the marriage.

42. Every such petition shall be served on the party to be affected thereby, either within or without her Majesty's dominions, in such manner as the court shall by any general or special order from time to time direct, and for that purpose the court shall have all the powers conferred by any statute on the Court of Chancery: provided always, that the said court may dispense with such service altogether in case it shall seem necessary or expedient so to do.

43. The court may, if it shall think fit, order the attendance of the petitioner, and may examine him or her, or permit him or her to be examined or cross-examined on oath on the hearing of any petition, but no such petitioner shall be bound to answer any question tending to shew that he or she has been guilty of adultery.

44. The court may from time to time adjourn the hearing of any such petition, and may require further evidence thereon, if it shall see fit so to do.

45. In any case in which the court shall pronounce a sentence of divorce or judicial separation for adultery of the wife, if it shall be made appear to the court that the wife is entitled to any property either in possession or reversion, it shall be lawful for the court, if it shall think proper, to order such settlement as it shall think reasonable to be made of such property or any part thereof, for the benefit of the innocent party, and of the children of the marriage, or either or any of them.

46. Subject to such rules and regulations as may be established as herein provided, the witnesses in all proceedings before the court where their attendance can be had shall be sworn and examined orally in open court: provided that parties, except as hereinbefore provided, shall be at liberty to verify their respective cases in whole or in part by affidavit, but so that the deponent in every such affidavit shall, on the application of the opposite party or by direction of the court, be subject to be cross-examined by or on behalf of the opposite party orally in open court, and after such cross-examination may be re-examined orally in open court as aforesaid by or on behalf of the party by whom such affidavit was filed.

47. Provided, that where a witness is out of the jurisdiction of the court, or where, by reason of his illness or from other circumstances, the court shall not think fit to enforce the attendance of the witness in open court, it shall be lawful for the court to order a commission to issue for the examination of such witness on oath, upon interrogatories or otherwise, or if the witness be within the jurisdiction of the court to order the examination of such witness on oath, upon interrogatories or otherwise, before any officer of the said court or other person to be named in such order for the purpose; and all the powers given to the courts of law at Westminster by the acts of the 13 Geo. 3, c. 63, and of the 1 Will. 4, c. 22, for enabling the courts of law at Westminster to issue commissions and give orders for the examination of witnesses in actions depending in such courts, and to enforce such examination, and all the provisions of the said acts, and of any other acts for enforcing or otherwise applicable to such examination and the witnesses examined, shall extend and be applicable to the court and to the examination of witnesses under the commissions and orders of the said court, and to the witnesses examined, as if such court were one of the courts of law at Westminster, and the matter before it were an action pending in such court.

48. The rules of evidence observed in the superior courts of common law at Westminster shall be applicable to and observed in the trial of all questions of fact in the court.

49. The court may, under its seal, issue writs of subpoena or subpoena duces tecum, commanding the attendance of witnesses at such time and place as shall be therein expressed; and such writs may be served in any part of Great Britain or Ireland; and every person served with such writ shall be bound to attend, and to be sworn and give evidence in obedience thereto, in the same manner as if it had been a writ of subpœna or subpoena duces tecum issued from any of the said superior courts of common law in a cause pending therein, and served in Great Britain or Ireland, as the case may be: provided that any petitioner required to be examined, or any person called as a witness, or required or desiring to make an affidavit or deposition under or for the purposes of this act, shall be permitted to make his solemn affirmation or declaration instead of being sworn in the circumstances and manner in which a person called as a witness, or desiring to make an affidavit or deposition, would be permitted so to do under the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, in cases within the provisions of that act.

50. All persons wilfully deposing or affirming falsely in any proceeding before the court shall be deemed to be guilty of perjury, and shall be liable to all the pains and penalties attached thereto.

51. The court on the hearing of any suit, proceeding, or petition under this act, and the House of Lords on the hearing of any appeal under this act, may make such order as to costs as to such court or house respectively may seem just: provided always, that there shall be no appeal on the subject of costs only.

52. All decrees and orders to be made by the court in any suit, proceeding, or petition to be instituted under authority of this act shall be enforced and put in execution in the same or the like manner as the judgments, orders, and decrees of the High Court of Chancery may be now enforced and put in execution.

53. The court shall make such rules and regulations concerning the practice and procedure under this act as it may from time to time consider expedient, and shall have full power from time to time to revoke or alter the same.

54. The court shall have full power to fix and regulate from time to time the fees payable upon all proceedings before it, all which fees shall be received, paid, and applied as herein directed: provided always, that the said court may make such rules and regulations as it may deem necessary and expedient for enabling persons to sue in the said court in formâ pauperis.

55. Either party dissatisfied with any decision of the court in any matter which, according to the provisions aforesaid, may be made by the judge ordinary alone, may, within three calendar months after the pronouncing thereof, appeal therefrom to the full court, whose decision shall be final.

56. Either party dissatisfied with the decision of the full court on any petition for the dissolution of a marriage may, within three months after the pronouncing thereof, appeal therefrom to the House of Lords if Parliament be then sitting, or if Parliament be not sitting at the end of such three months, then within fourteen days next after its meeting; and on the hearing of any such appeal the House of Lords may either dismiss the appeal or reverse the decree, or remit the case to the court, to be dealt with in all respects as the House of Lords shall direct.

57. When the time hereby limited for appealing against any decree dissolving a marriage shall have expired, and no appeal shall have been presented against such decree, or when any such appeal shall have been dismissed, or when in the result of any appeal any marriage shall be declared to be dissolved, but not sooner, it shall be lawful for the respective parties thereto to marry again, as if the prior marriage had been dissolved by death: provided always, that no clergyman in holy orders of the United Church of England and Ireland shall be compelled to solemnise the marriage of any person whose former marriage may have been dissolved on the ground of his or her adultery, or shall be liable to any suit, penalty, or censure for solemnising or refusing to solemnise the marriage of any such person.

58. Provided always, that when any minister of any church or chapel of the United Church of England and Ireland shall refuse to perform such marriage service between any persons who but for such refusal would be entitled to have the same service performed in such church or chapel, such minister shall permit any other minister in holy orders of the said United Church, entitled to officiate within the diocese in which such church or chapel is situate, to perform such marriage service in such church or chapel.

59. After this act shall have come into operation no action shall be maintainable in England for criminal conversation.

60. None of the fees payable under this act, except as herein expressly provided, shall be received in money, but every such fee shall be collected and received by a stamp denoting the amount of the fee which would otherwise be payable; and the fees to be so collected by stamps shall be "stamp duties," and be under the management of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue.

61. The provisions contained in or referred to by an act of the present session of Parliament, "to amend the Laws relating to Probates and Letters of Administration in England," and applicable to the collection and payment and accounts of the fees to be received thereunder by means of stamps, and to such stamps, and the vellum, parchment, or paper on or to which the same shall be impressed or affixed, and in relation to documents which ought to have stamps impressed thereon or affixed thereto, and to the punishment of persons for such wrongful acts as therein mentioned in relation to stamps, or fees or sums of money which ought to be collected by means of stamps, shall be applicable to and for the purposes of this act, as if such provisions as aforesaid had been contained or referred to in this act with reference to the like matters, and the court under this act had been mentioned, instead of the Court of Probate, or the judge thereof, as the case may be.

62. It shall be lawful for the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, out of such monies as may be provided and appropriated by Parliament for the purpose, to cause to be paid all necessary expenses of the court under this act, and other expenses which may be incurred in carrying the provisions of this act into effect, except as herein otherwise provided.

63. The same amount of stamp duty as is now payable on the admission of a proctor to any ecclesiastical court shall be payable by every person to be admitted as a proctor in the Court of Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, or in the Court of Probate, who shall not have been previously admitted as a proctor in the other of such courts, or in an Ecclesiastical or Admiralty Court, and have paid the stamp duty in respect thereof; and every person who shall practise as a proctor or as a solicitor or attorney in the said Court of Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, or the said Court of Probate, shall obtain an annual certificate to authorise him so to do, under the Stamp Duty Acts, in the same manner as proctors practising in the Ecclesiastical or Admiralty Courts, and solicitors and attornies practising in her Majesty's courts at Westminster, are now required to do by the said acts or any of them, and shall be subject and liable to the same penalties and disabilities in case of any neglect to obtain such certificates as such proctors, attornies, and solicitors are now subject and liable to for any similar neglect, and as if the clauses and provisions of the said acts in relation to such certificates had been inserted in this act, and specially enacted in reference to proctors, solicitors, and attornies practising in the said Court of Divorce and Matrimonial Causes and Court of Probate, provided that one annual certificate only shall be required for any one person, although he may practise in more than one of the capacities aforesaid, or in several of the courts hereinbefore mentioned.

64. Every person who at the time of the passing of this act has been duly admitted and is practising as a proctor in any ecclesiastical court in England shall, at the expiration of two years from and after the commencement of this act, be entitled to make a claim for compensation to the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury; and the said commissioners, by examination of evidence on oath, (which they are hereby empowered to administer), or otherwise, as they shall think fit, shall inquire into and ascertain the loss, if any, of professional gains and profits in respect of suits relating to marriage and divorce sustained by such proctors respectively, upon a comparison in each case of the average clear gains of the three years immediately before the commencement of this act, arising from such last-mentioned business, and the average of the same gains during the two years immediately succeeding the commencement of this act; and the said commissioners shall in each case, having regard to all the circumstances, award a reasonable compensation, by way of annuity, to the persons sustaining such loss, during their lives, but in no case shall such annuity exceed one-half of the annual loss so ascertained as aforesaid; and such annuities shall be paid out of monies to be annually provided by Parliament for that purpose, and the persons receiving the same shall be subject to the provisions contained in the 19th section of the act of the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 24.

65. In case the judge of the Court of Probate established by any act passed during the present session, shall be appointed judge ordinary of the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, the salary of such judge shall be the sum of 5000*l.* per annum; but such judge, if afterwards appointed judge of the Admiralty Court, shall not be entitled to any increase of salary.

66. Any one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State may order every judge, registrar, or other officer of any ecclesiastical court in England or the Isle of Man, or any other person having the public custody of or control over any letters-patent, records, deeds, processes, acts, proceedings, books, documents, or other instrument relating to marriages, or to suits for divorce, nullity of marriage, restitution of conjugal rights, or to any other matters or causes matrimonial, except marriage licenses, to transmit the same, at such times and in such manner, to such places in London or Westminster, and under such regulations, as the said Secretary of State may appoint; and if any judge, registrar, officer, or other person shall wilfully disobey such order, he shall for the first offence forfeit the sum of 100*l.*, to be recoverable by any registrar of the Court of Probate as a debt under this act in any of the superior courts at Westminster, and for the second and subsequent offences the judge ordinary may commit the person so offending to prison for any period not exceeding three calendar months, provided that the warrant of committal be countersigned by one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, and the said persons so offending shall forfeit all claim to compensation under this act.

67. All rules and regulations concerning practice or procedure, or fixing or regulating fees, which may be made by the court under this act, shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament within one month after the making thereof, if Parliament be then sitting, or if Parliament be not then sitting, within one month after the commencement of the then next session of Parliament.

68. The judge ordinary of the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes for the time being shall cause to be prepared in each year ending the 31st December a return of all fees and monies levied in such year on account of the fee fund of the Court of Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, and of any other fund under the authority of this act; also, a return of the annual salaries of the said judge ordinary, and of all persons holding offices in the said court, with all the incidental expenses of the said court, whether the salaries and incidental expenses aforesaid be defrayed out of fees or out of any other monies; also, a return of all superannuations, pensions, annuities, retiring allowances, and compensations made payable under this act, in each year, stating the gross amount, and the amount in detail, of such charges: provided always, that all such returns as aforesaid shall be presented to both Houses of Parliament on or before the 31st March in each year, if Parliament is then sitting, and if Parliament is not sitting, then such returns shall be presented within one month of the first meeting of Parliament after the 31st March in each year.
